HOW JUNGLE AND PRAIRIE HELP REARM AMERICA

America has so many steel mills that the job of making sure they will never go "hungry" has started a world-wide search for iron ore.

This page tells about three vital steps in steel production: 1. More ore... 2. Better transportation...3. New steel mills.

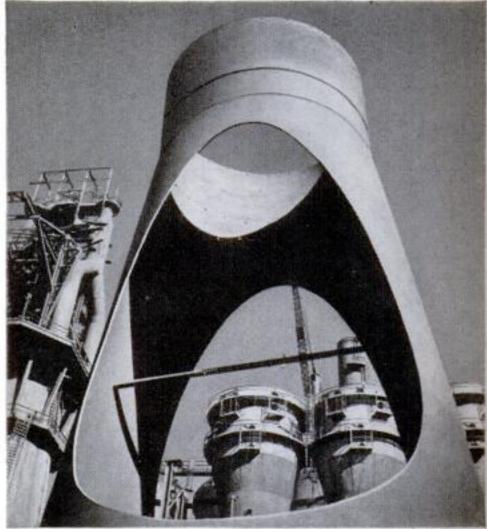

road ties.

MAKING HISTORY WITH STEAM: New steel mills (and production from present mills) are going up so fast that the summer season of ore boat transportation needs to be stretched. This picture shows first wintertime trainload of frozen ore being given a steam bath for fast dumping.

If enough steel for armament and steel for homes and business are possible at the same time, competition among America's more than 200 steel companies will accomplish it. Production records are zooming . . . If you want to read more facts about your country's greatest industrial hedge against war and inflation, write for preprint from the magazine Steelways, "African Iron and American Steel," American Iron and Steel Institute, 350 Fifth Avenue, New York 1, N. Y.

ANOTHER MELTING POT: This is a big section of a furnace used in making iron. America has more steel production than all the rest of the world, but millions of tons are being added.

See the refrigerator that was made for once-a-week shopping!

Frigidaire's constant SAFE COLD
lets you decide how often to market

Now you're free to stock a whole week's supply of meats and frozen foods safely in the near-zero freezing cold of Frigidaire's big Super-Freezer. It holds up to 49 pounds of food and there's still room for loads of big, crystal-hard ice cubes!

Tuck a week's supply of vegetables into Frigidaire's bin-size Hydrators and see how that moist-cold keeps them wonderfully crisp and garden-fresh. And Frigidaire, with safe cold clear to the bottom, keeps them that way until your next trip to market.

Here's head room for plenty of tall bottles, a basket drawer for eggs and dairy products. And adjustable shelves that practically stretch to welcome a week's supply of food—kept safe for days on end with constant, chilling cold.

You're the boss with the new Frigidaire! Instead of being forced to market several days a week—you have a refrigerator that lets you decide how often to shop.

Once a week's plenty, in most families, because this new Frigidaire holds more food than old models, without taking any more kitchen space—thanks to the skillful arrangement of working parts.

And—even more important—it gives you the different kinds of cold you need to keep all foods safe. Safe cold top to bottom. You get this safer cold from Frigidaire's famous Meter-Miser—the simplest coldmaking mechanism ever built. And only Frigidaire has it!

Other Frigidaire advantages include Quickube Ice Trays that pop out ice cubes without tugging or melting. Lifetime Porcelain that won't discolor, rustproof aluminum shelves, and hosts of other features that have caused more women to choose Frigidaire than any other refrigerator.

Three keys to better health

Medical science

brings him a brighter future

As the family physician keeps pace with today's dramatic progress in medical science, the odds in favor of his patients reaching threescore and ten become increasingly brighter.

Especially strong reasons for this hope are recent advances of medical science on three broad fronts—against infections, against nutritional deficiencies, and in the use of hormones against disease. In each of these vital fields Merck & Co., Inc. has played a leading role both in pioneering research and in perfecting production techniques.

ANTIBIOTICS

Today's abundant supply of Penicillin and Streptomycin at a cost low enough to permit wide use by physicians in fighting infections—is in no small measure the result of Merck specialized laboratories and production facilities.

VITAMINS

From Vitamin B₁ on through Crystalline Vitamin B₁₂, the ruby-colored vitamin that controls pernicious anemia, Merck research and production skill have helped bring the entire range of vitamins to the pharmacy and the food industry.

HORMONES

Cortisone, hailed as the key to a new era in medical science, marks another milestone in Merck achievements. This hormone brings new hope for the treatment of many diseases for which there has been little or no help in the past. More recently, Merck scientists have succeeded in producing in the laboratory Compound F, a hormone which shows promise of duplicating the dramatic effects of Cortisone.

"LITTLE ORVIE"

Sirs:

You stated that Orville L. Hubbard ("'Little Orvie' Rides Again," LIFE, March 5) is the most clownish mayor in the U.S. Noted you failed to mention that the city of Dearborn is one of the cleanest cities in the U.S., for which we credit our mayor.

ARTEUR L. KELTERBORN

Dearborn, Mich.

Sirs:

Orville L. Hubbard has meant all things to all people during his long tenure of office. My father, who headed the recent recall movement, is the same man who defended Hubbard when the city council passed its illadvised "gag" law limiting the mayor's right to talk to the people.

In the last few years many people and groups that formerly admired Hubbard have become appalled at his increasing abuse of office.

CHARLES WAGNER

STAN KUKAWKA

Cambridge, Mass.

Sirs:

The half-truths you printed are malarky. Dearborn's taxes are way below those of its "suburb" Detroit.

The hospital Orvie opposed without the outpatient clinic would be another hospital for the elite.

The main reason Orville Hubbard isn't liked by the "big wheels" of Dearborn is that he can't be pushed around.

Dearborn, Mich.

• Dearborn's tax rate is low because about 60% of its total taxes are paid by the Ford Motor Co. Hubbard opposed the Ford hospital plan largely out of pique because the company contributed the money through the Greater Detroit Hospital Fund rather than directly to Dearborn and the Hubbard administration.—ED.

Sirs:

Those of us who are thoroughly ashamed of the antics of "Little Orvie" think your article was priceless.

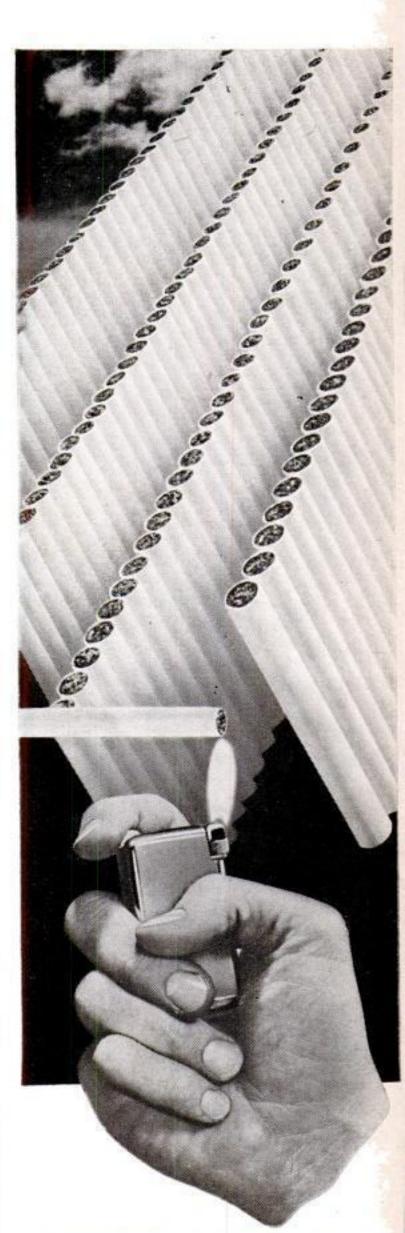

Orvie's reaction to Life's story was set forth in the Dearborn Guide, March 8: "The mayor showed his contempt for Time and Life by tearing them to shreds in front of Life Correspondent Don Wilson. However the old copies of Life and Time the mayor carefully preserved. He spread them on the floor of his outer office. 'Everybody who comes in to see us will have to step on them,' he confided."

Sirs:

Printing such nonsense and, above all, sacrilege against the Church has angered our potential allies, who remember the "good old days" in Holy Russia and live for such times to return. This is a stupid and harmful article. Soviet propaganda charges that the U.S. is against Russia, Russian culture and the Russian people but not against Communism. Your article gives evidence of this because this is not anti-Communistic but anti-Russian.

V. V. Brunst

Baltimore, Md.

Nowhere in the memoirs LIFE published does De Custine disparage the Russian people. His attacks are all aimed at oppressive Russian officials. The Soviet government itself published the memoirs in 1930 to show how autocratic czarism was, then withdrew the book when it realized the close parallel to Communist rule and methods.—ED.

ALBERT RYDER

Sirs:

I have been reading over the Ryder article ("Nocturnal Genius," LIFE, Feb. 26). Really you deserve a lot of credit for publishing this sort of article. Ryder was our greatest American poet in paint, and too few of the public have known about him. By publishing this sort of article and advertising the opening of a special room in the Smithsonian Institution, you do the very thing that you have consistently striven to do; that is, widen the horizon of the American public, directing them to the most interesting activities of a cultural nature. In this day of so much necessary emphasis of military matters it is refreshing that we take care of our esthetic logistics.

The Secret of Lovelier Hair

for more than a century

Photograph by Horst.

MICHAEL OF THE WALDORF styles the hair of Mrs. Albert Tilt, 3rd, Greenwich, Connecticut, following a Conti Castile Shampoo.

Beauty Authorities agree, "Pure Castile is the best shampoo."
And, for pure castile at its finest, leading hair stylists choose Conti...
the pure castile shampoo that contains pure imported olive oil for greater hair leveliness.

Thanks to its natural oils, Conti guards the health of the scalp, leaves the hair silky-soft, lustrous and perfectly conditioned to take and hold its wave.

For more than a century, lovely women have used Conti for finest hair care—first with shampoo made at home by dissolving famous Conti pure castile soap, imported since 1836—now in response to their demand, with perfected Conti Castile Shampoo in liquid form.

Today millions of women use Conti for their fine shampoos. Absolutely pure and mild, it has no drying effect, contains no mysterious or irritating ingredients, is safe for children and all the family. It does not streak or fade hair and needs no conditioning agents or after rinses.

Use Conti regularly . . . it will make your hair lovelier.

B.F. Goodrich the WORLD'S FIRST Protects Against Blowouts

NOW Tests by the American Automobile Association add scientific proof that the BFG Tubeless Tire not only seals punctures—it protects against blowouts!

HOW IT WORKS: (1) Inner layer of special rubber built into tire body protects against sudden blowouts. (2) Gummy material under tread seals punctures. (3) Rim-seal ridges form airtight lock on standard rims.

1942 B. F. GOODRICH DEVELOPS TUBELESS TIRE. During World War II, B. F. Goodrich applied the tubeless principle to combat tires. BFG scientists later applied this tubeless principle to tires for automobiles.

1946 TUBELESS TIRE PASSES TESTS. With problems that long baffled tire engineers solved at last, BFG Tubeless Tires show blowout and puncture safety in tests on police, taxi, test fleets.

1948 TUBELESS TIRE PLACED ON SALE.
After 3 years of intensive testing, the Tubeless Tire is placed on sale for the first time in Cincinnati, January 22, 1948.

1948 FIRST NATIONAL AD. Invention of the Tubeless Tire is announced in a full-page ad in the New York Times and Wall Street Journal on Feb. 8 and 9, 1948.

1949 NEWSREELS SHOW TUBELESS TIRE. In movie theaters across the country, millions see newsreels of the Tubeless Tire in action. Three national magazines feature articles on it.

1949 of the Tubeless Tire is expanded to 30 states, hundreds of local newspaper ads tell motorists about Tubeless Tire safety.

Reports on 3 Years' Use of TUBELESS TIRE that and Seals Punctures, Too!

1947 TUBELESS TIRE MAKES NEWS. First press announcement of the invention of the Tubeless Tire by B. F. Goodrich appears in newspapers on May 12, 1947.

1950 USERS' REPORT. With the Tubeless Tire now proved by actual use by thousands of motorists, a BFG national ad in August, 1950 quotes typical user reports:
—"no blowouts"; "no flats from punctures".

Over Half A Million B. F. Goodrich Tubeless Tires Built!

Bought and Proved by Thousands of Motorists!

Performance Certified by American Automobile Association!

OVER half a million B. F. Goodrich Tubeless Tires have now been built!

Already more than 100,000 people have bought them since they went on sale three years ago!

Three full years of use under actual driving conditions have proved that the B. F. Goodrich Tubeless Tire protects against blowouts and seals punctures, too!

And now impartial tests supervised by the American Automobile Association add scientific proof!

The Contest Board of AAA has issued Certificates of Performance, certifying to the blowout and puncture protection of the B. F. Goodrich Tubeless Tire.

Conventional tires and Tubeless Tires were weakened by knife cuts to force failure under identical conditions. Conventional tires all blew out explosively. Tubeless Tires lost air slowly, allowing plenty of time for a slow, safe stop.

States the AAA Certificate: "For all of the Tubeless Tires tested, an average of 4 min., 4 sec., was required for pressure to drop from 22 lbs. per sq. inch to 3 lbs. per sq. inch."

Why doesn't the Tubeless Tire blow out? The Tubeless Tire has no inner tube to fail with sudden release of air. Its air-retaining inner layer of special rubber is built into the tire. When a break in the fabric occurs, the tire's action gradually causes a small break in the liner and a slow release of air.

The AAA further reports: "B. F. Goodrich Tubeless Tires were driven over spike boards in such a manner that several spikes completely penetrated the tire at the tread and were then withdrawn with no loss of air pressure indicated on the gauge."

The B. F. Goodrich Tubeless Tire is now on sale nationwide. However, because B. F. Goodrich is cooperating with the government's program to restrict the use of rubber, it may not be available in your area at this time.

MOHAMMED'S MUSTACHE

Sirs:

A year and a half ago you published a color picture I had taken in Alexandria of a military guard, Mohammed Ibrahim Sayed Ahmed ("Mohammed's Mustache," LIFE, Oct. 17, 1949). No sooner had his picture appeared, over a black and white inset of King Fuad, than Ahmed's superior officers backed him up without a word, clipped his mustachios and banished him to an isolated village beat. A subsequent explanation, that his mustache distracted drivers and snarled traffic, did not satisfy Mohammed, who filed suit against the government a year ago. This month a state council court announced its ruling. Mohammed was awarded one piastre (3¢) for "moral damages," can return to Alexandria and may begin regrowing his magnificent mustache. PAR-BUSTERS

SIRS:

You say that the Peachtree golf course is the longest (7,219 yards) in the U.S. ("Par-Buster's Nightmare," LIFE, March 5). The Alondra Park course near Los Angeles, Calif. is 7,460 yards long.

DICK PRICE

Altadena, Calif.

SIRS:

The course is much easier than it appears since the pars on some holes seem to be altered. For instance, on the long course, holes 7, 12, 15 and 17 are listed as par 4s yet, according to U.S.G.A., holes over 445 yards in length are (and should be) par 5s. This would make the course a par 76.

BILL PLUE

Portland, Ore.

 Although par rulings are usually based on distance, allowances must be made for "difficult or unusual conditions." Peachtree par is a legitimate 72.—ED.

PUCK'S BAD BOY

SIRS:

Ah, the good old days, when hockey teams were out for blood and inevitably drew it ("Puck's Bad Boy," LIFE, March 5). Such an icequiet sport, where mayhem was merely a preliminary tussle and murder the main go.

With all due respects to Connie Smythe and his addiction to red ice, I prefer the game as played today. Less gore perhaps, but hockey to me is a game, not a war, and when played well by a winning team will attract an audience anywhere.

WEIRD PLANT OR DWARF DOPEY'S GOWN

THESE STACKS ARE LIKE TWO NUNS

One day recently Photographers Diane and Ray Witlin, who like most New Yorkers usually walk around their city staring glassily ahead, looked up and saw the wonderfully grotesque silhouettes shown on these pages. The shapes are chimney stacks, which are put on top of chimneys and boiler flues to improve the draft and to keep out rain and soot. After walking around for a few days with their noses pointed chimneyward, the Witlins began going up on roofs and photographing likely looking stacks. Because in most cases building superintendents thought they were spies or firebugs, they often had to sneak upstairs surreptitiously and several times climbed through skylights on flimsy ladders. What the stack-happy Witlins imagine their silhouettes look like is described in the captions. If Life's readers try hard enough, they can probably imagine almost anything.

LIFE'S COVER

Four-year-old Karen Pine, who appears on this week's cover, is already an oldtimer in the Choir of Cherubs (pp. 68-70), having been a member since she was 2. Karen spends a good deal of her time singing, usually starting the day with a wobbly version of the Tennessee Waltz and continuing to warble as she helps her mother around the house. In the choir her greatest distinction is her yawning. Good singers know the proper singing position is close to yawning, and hardly a song passes with-out Karen's being overwhelmed by a huge yawn. When this happens, she takes care of the yawn and continues to sing without closing her mouth at all.

Here's Why You Need Bayer Aspirin When You Have A Cold

-to Feel Better Fast!

At the first sign of a cold—before you do anything else-take two BAYER ASPIRIN tablets with a full glass of water. Here's why:

When you have a cold, it's almost invariably accompanied by a headachy, feverish feeling and muscular aches and pains. And it's very important to your well being that you treat these distressing symptoms with a medication that will relieve them ... relieve them quickly. By taking BAYER ASPIRIN at the first sign of a cold, you'll get this important relief.

No matter how you try to stop or shorten a cold, we believe that your own doctor will tell you that this is sound advice.

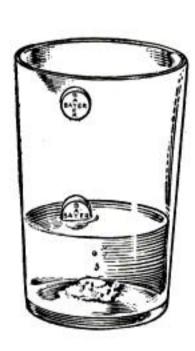

FEEL BETTER FAST

And when you use BAYER ASPIRIN, you'll discover why millions have followed this advice with remarkable results. For BAYER ASPIRIN works fast. It's actually ready to go to work in two seconds. And this is one reason why it brings you amazingly quick relief from these painful cold symptoms.

This two second speed is something you can see with your own eyes by dropping a BAYER ASPIRIN tablet in a glass of water and "clocking" its disintegration.

WHAT TO DO FOR SORE THROAT

When your cold causes a sore throat, gargle with three BAYER ASPIRIN tablets dissolved in one-third of a glass of water. This makes a highly potent medicinal gargle that almost instantly soothes tender throat membranes, relieves pain and irritation.

Besides being effective, BAYER ASPIRIN is also gentle. Its single active ingredient is so gentle to the system that doctors regularly prescribe it even for small children.

Keep BAYER ASPIRIN handy. When you buy, be sure to ask for it by its full name-Bayer Aspirin-not just for "Aspirin" alone.

Because no other pain reliever can match its record of use by millions of normal people, without ill effect, one thing you can take with complete confidence is genuine

LIFE

IN HIS UNPRETENTIOUS HOME IN PALISADE, N.J. GAMBLING KING JOE ADONIS WATCHES FRANK COSTELLO'S FINGERS WRITHE OVER A 16-INCH TV SCREEN

THE U.S. GETS A CLOSE LOOK AT CRIME

Like millions of other Americans a New Jersey man named Joe Doto found it hard to leave his television set last week. He sat staring at the big screen in his living room, muttering "What a sucker!" as he watched the tense, febrile fingers of a business acquaintance, Frank Costello. Since they are bigtime gamblers, both Doto, who prefers to be known as Joe Adonis, and Costello had been summoned before the Kefauver Senate committee investigating interstate crime. But Doto had refused to testify and had thereby risked jail. Costello, for a while at least, was cooperating. Now, while his friend squirmed under the barrage of questions, Doto watched.

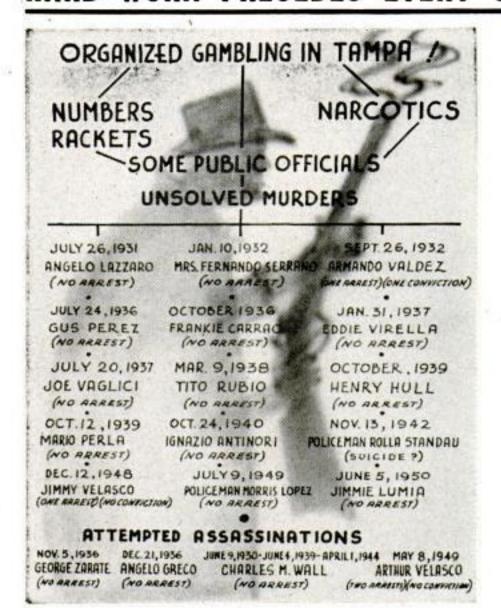

The rest of the U.S., watching along with Doto, undoubtedly found the show more novel and exciting than he did. The Kefauver committee, one of the most spectacular dramatic hits in the history of U.S. congressional investigation, was ending its run in New York (pp. 38-39) with a climactic galaxy of underworld stars, uneasy politicians and reluctant policemen. The committee had been set up to investigate interstate crime and propose corrective legislation. In its 10 months' tour it had learned a good deal about U.S. crime, most of which had been known or rumored locally but had never before been pieced together into a national pattern. Its great accomplishment, however, was the immediate impact its investigation had on the U.S. public.

In six cities the hearings were televised and as many as 15 million citizens, who knew crime only dimly through news columns or mistakenly through B movies, suddenly saw it in actuality, close up. They heard and saw a sheriff lamely try to explain how he had saved more money than he had earned, a businessman trying to make sums paid to underworld figures "for arrangements" sound like innocent transactions, and the darkly furious face of a Costello as he refused to testify "on the grounds it would incriminate me." For the first time they realized how their own political laziness and unthinking acceptance of "harmless" betting had permitted the growth of a crime network, entrenched in the nicest neighborhoods and enmeshed with respectable businesses. They saw what it had done to their public servants, from patrolman to exalted official. No amount of investigating would stamp out U.S. gambling or crime overnight. But by showing the nation crime's top practitioners and abettors in action, stammering out their damning evasion's or refusals, the Kefauver committee enabled the U.S. to reach a private verdict right in its own living room.

HARD WORK PRECEDES EVERY COMMITTEE HEARING

TROUBLE IN TAMPA started an investigation there. Chart made from records (above) showed 14 unsolved murders in 20 years. Before the committee opened hearings, it spent weeks digging up evidence.

CHECKING COURT RECORDS, Downey Rice, former FBI man, laboriously works through land-transfer listings and finds that Tampa's Sheriff Culbreath had land dealings with underworld figures.

SERVING SUBPOENA on the Tampa Western Union manager, Investigator Ralph Mills (right) seeks to establish whether Continental Wire Service used Western Union to send race data to other cities.

THE SENATORS TURN UP SOME CHARACTERS

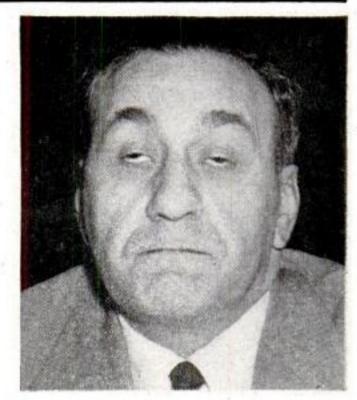

"BOTTLES" CAPONE, brother of Al, told committee in Chicago that his income was $3,000, finally admitted to $18,000. He is now having tax trouble.

"SCARFACE" DIGIOVANNI, Kansas City liquor distributor, swore he had never been convicted of felony, but admitted being an ex-bootlegger.

"WILLIE" MORETTI, testifying in Washington, admitted to making a living from gambling, said he had won $25,000 on Truman's 1948 victory.

"TONY" ACCARDO was called by committee "the symbol of organized crime in interstate commerce," coldly refused to answer most questions.

DEATH AND HEADACHES ARE BY-PRODUCTS OF HEARINGS

MURDER IN LOS ANGELES took place when Samuel-Rummel, Gambler Mickey Cohen's lawyer, was cut down in his driveway by shotgun slugs. He learned of a coming grand jury investigation, was killed before he could testify.

THREATS IN TAMPA were made to LIFE photographer after he took pictures of these wary deputies checking witnesses entering investigators' hotel.

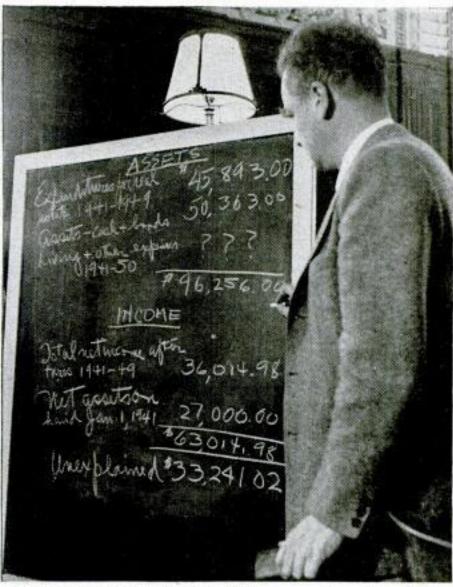

MURDER IN CHICAGO was result of ex-Acting Police Captain Bill Drury's plan to deliver vital racket information to the Kefauver committee. He had a date to testify, was shot down in his driveway the day before the hearing.

AT SECRET RENDEZVOUS in a roadhouse 40 miles from Tampa, committee investigators cross-question Mrs. Clara DiLorenzo about her husband's possible connections with recent Tampa gang killing.

She and her husband denied any connection, but she was afraid that if she testified in public she would be killed. Committee usually heard witnesses in private hearings before the public sessions were held.

HARD WORK PAYS OFF at open hearings. Here a committee counsel jots down Sheriff Culbreath's income. It was shown that since 1941 sheriff acquired $34,684 more than he has reported as net income.

"KING" CLANCY, Louisiana sheriff, told committee in Washington he had permitted gambling in parish for years, would close it down right away.

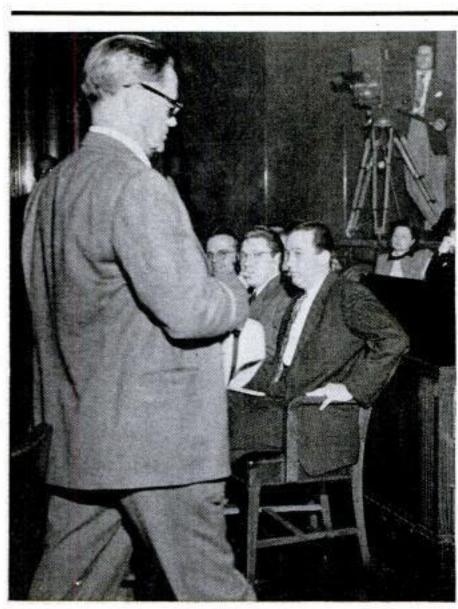

"TUBBO" GILBERT, a Chicago prosecutor's investigator, admitted amassing $360,000. Revelation helped lose Senator Lucas the 1950 election.

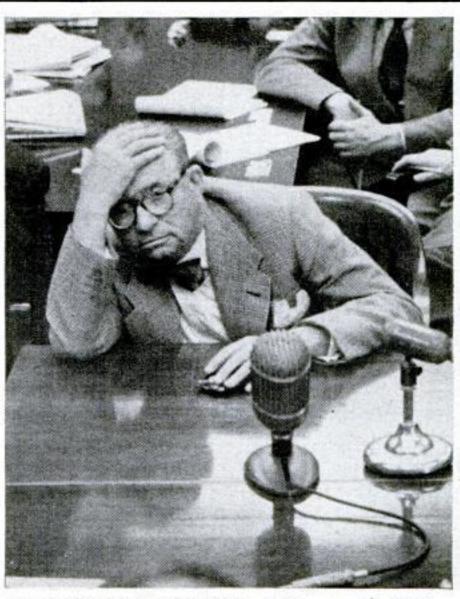

"JIMMY" SULLIVAN, a Florida sheriff, admitted that in a five-year term of office his assets increased from about $2,500 to more than $74,000.

"MELONHEAD" CULBREATH, sheriff of Tampa was indicted on five counts of bribery and malfeasance as result of hearings (top, opposite page).

WALKOUT IN ST. LOUIS came when Betting Commissioner James J. Carroll, summoned to testify before committee, refused to permit himself to appear on television, stalked out of room in a huff.

HEADACHE IN CLEVELAND came to Mickey McBride as he tried to explain to committee that it was his son, a student in Florida, and not he, who controlled racing-wire service called Continental Press.

LOBBYIST IN SAN FRANCISCO, Arthur Samish, admitted profitable tie-up with liquor industry. Committee found that since 1944 California brewers had paid him $1 million for which he kent no records

Most of the New York work of the Kefauver committee has been done by the four men in the big picture at right. The smaller pictures at the bottom of these pages show the kind of quarry they have been after. They portray Joe Adonis, who is watching television on page 33, and studying them you might wonder why a man who seems so friendly and home-loving could ever interest a crime investigation. Although he has been indicted on charges of kidnaping, extortion and assault (later dismissed), Adonis is a quiet-spoken, conservatively dressed man of 52 who lives in a respectable neighborhood. He is worshiped by his children, takes only an occasional drink. He says his idea of a big evening is gin rummy with friends. He has built up a legitimate and lucrative automobile haulaway business which he runs efficiently. The only trouble with Joe Adonis is that he is also an ex-bootlegger, a bigtime gambler, a notorious underworld figure and, according to the Kefauver committee, one of the most important figures in the U.S. crime network. And he has been able to wield enormous behind-the-scenes political power.

Over the years Adonis has engaged in many legitimate businesses. He does not object to profits just because they are legitimate. But along with these, according to an indictment pending against him in New Jersey, he was running a "carpet joint" (a plush gambling establishment, as opposed to the less swank "sawdust joint"). Joe does not greatly mind indictments, or being called a big gambler, or even being haled before the Kefauver committee which may result in imprisonment for the first time in his life. But he bitterly resents the fact that as a result of Kefauver revelations he will probably lose his haulaway business. That, thinks Joe Adonis, whose dice and blackjack layouts have lost many a buck for many a sucker, is just plain persecution and lousy.

JOE ADONIS ON STAND, flanked by his lawyer, was a defiant witness. He was first cited for contempt when he refused to testify last December.

This time he again refused to answer most questions of the committee. "Its sole purpose," he later said, "is to obtain evidence to be used against me."

A SUBURBANITE, Adonis lives in eightroom home in Palisade, a middle-class commuter town across Hudson from Manhattan.

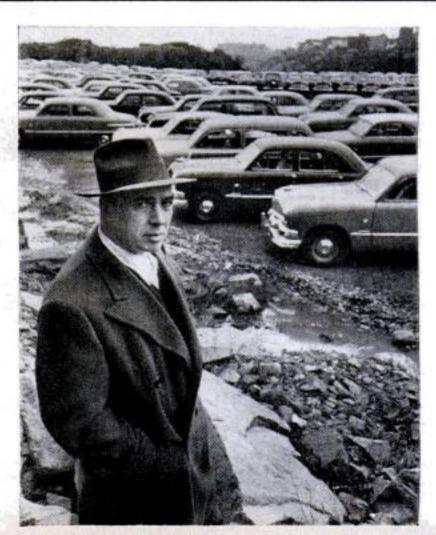

AT A LATE BREAKFAST, which is customarily at noon, Adonis drinks coffee while he dandles his 9-month-old daughter. He has three other children: a boy, 17, and two other girls, aged 14 and 3.

SENATOR CHARLES W. TOBEY

Leaning on his elbow with deceptive calm, the 70-year-old New Hampshire Republican listens to an exchange between Chairman O'Conor and Gambler Frank Costello (back to camera, foreground) during the third day of hearings in New York's U.S. Courthouse. Often cranky, always unpredictable, Tobey found that his strict New England conscience was shocked by linking of politics and crime, burst into a minor misquotation of Whittier: "But solution there is none, save in the rule of Christ alone," and then he sat with tear-filled eyes as the audience applauded.

HIS LEGAL BUSINESS is hauling cars from Ford plant at nearby Edgewater. Last year his company hauled more than 80,000 Fords.

SENATOR HERBERT R. O'CONOR

Hunching toward the microphone, the Maryland senator (second from left), acting as chairman at the third morning's session, interrupts the witness. Although he speaks less frequently than his colleagues, the 54-year-old former state governor usually is wordier when he does start talking. Said one spectator of O'Conor's well-modulated tones, "He has a voice like a radio announcer." O'Conor was temporary chairman when Costello revolted against being televised and he rendered the Solomonlike judgment that Costello's hands could be shown but his face could not.

SENATOR ESTES KEFAUVER

Absorbed in notes on his desk is the permanent chairman. Invariably calm, Kefauver was never flustered or angered by the legal wrangling and evasive testimony. Even when Senator Tobey, railing at Costello's threat to walk out, snorted, "Damn the torpedoes, go ahead," the 47-year-old senator from Tennessee kept his composure. Ignoring his colleague's belligerence, Kefauver went quietly on to explain to the gambler that refusal to testify might land him in jail for contempt of the Senate. After a brief conference with his attorney Costello walked out anyway.

COUNSEL RUDOLPH HALLEY

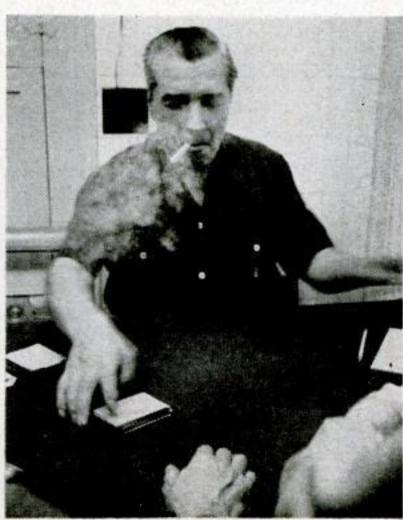

Dead-panned and patient, the committee's chief counsel waits to resume his questioning. Sometimes with an almost sing-song repetition, sometimes with a rasping bite to his voice, but always with planned persistence, the 37-year-old Halley hacks away at evasive witnesses until he gets the explicit answers that he knows are surely there. An assistant federal district attorney in New York at the age of 24, Halley became the chief counsel of the old Truman war investigating committee in 1944, a year later retired to private law until last May when he joined Kefauver.

VISITING HIS BANKER, Joseph Brannigan, Edgewater National Bank, Adonis gets warm greeting. His firm keeps account here.

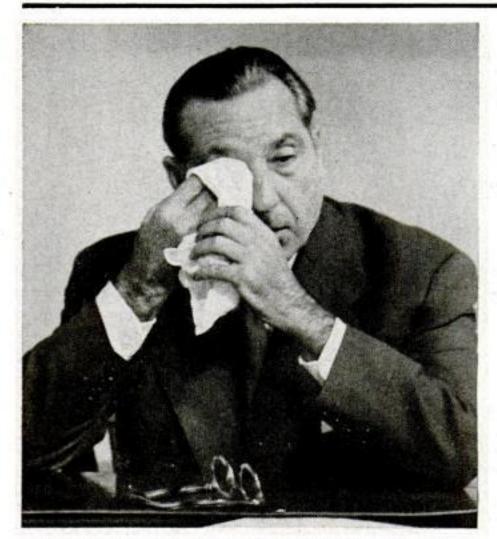

IN BARBERSHOP Adonis waits patiently while his friend Paul Banadio, who is a vice president of his auto haulaway firm, gets a shave. Among his associates Adonis is known as a very soft touch.

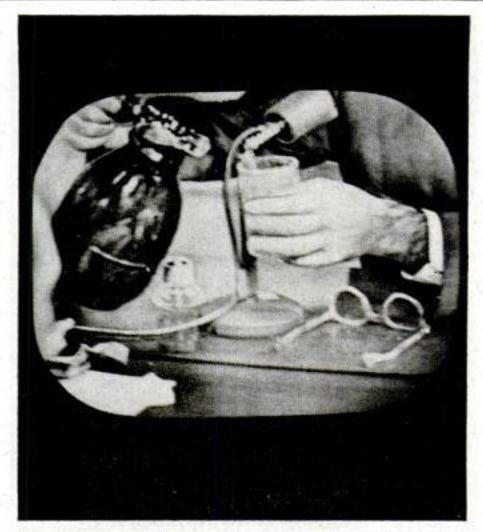

A "GIN" EXPERT, Adonis spends his evenings at the card table. When he gambles with his friends Adonis always keeps the stakes low.

A SICK AND SENSITIVE MAN

costello on the stand nervously wipes face on first day of his testimony. He refused to tell the committee how much he was worth, was threatened with contempt proceedings and deportation.

COSTELLO ON TV appeared only as pair of hands nervously tearing paper and pouring water. He refused to allow his face to be televised on the grounds that he did not care to submit himself as a spectacle.

while Wolf smothers microphone. Last week, after his lawyer had argued that he was too ill to talk, Costello got up and walked out of court (opposite page).

SOME SILENT AND SIMPLE PEOPLE

TIGHT-LIPPED, Gambler Frank Erickson, who was brought to court from prison where he is serving two years for bookmaking and conspiracy, refused to talk. Asked his business, he said, "I'm in jail."

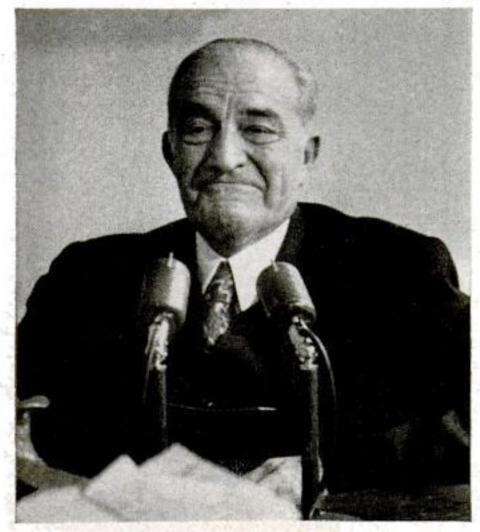

LOGICAL, Lawyer George Levy of Nassau Trotting Association made everything seem simple as he explained that he had given Costello $60,000 to keep bookies off track and had no idea how Costello did it.

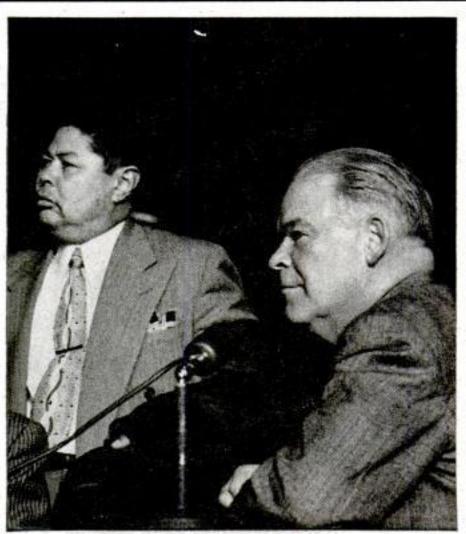

INGENUOUS, Virginia Hill Hauser, ex-girl friend of the late "Bugsy" Siegel, said men kept giving her money just because they were friends, and that she didn't know exactly how much of it she had right now.

THE FRIENDS OF BILL O'DWYER

O'DWYER FRIEND Charles Lipsky, a Brooklyn Republican, testified he knew Adonis and Costello and that in 1945 he considered the approval of Costello a necessary thing for any mayoralty candidate.

O'DWYER HENCHMAN James J. Moran, New York City Commissioner of Water Supply, said that Louis Weber (left), policy operator, had visited him. Weber denied this, was then charged with perjury.

O'DWYER HIMSELF, shown at New York St. Patrick's Day parade with Mayor Impellitteri (left), flew in from his post as ambassador to Mexico to explain what, if any, connections he had with Costello.

A NEW PORTRAIT OF THE U.S.

"THE AMERICAN PROPOSITION" STILL BEARS THE LINEAMENTS OF 1776

DON'T BE FOOLED

As this is written a noticeable lull has hit the international scene. In Korea, things are looking up. In Washington, fevers are going down. There is a widespread notion that the Great Debate is over.

No such thing, says Governor Thomas E. Dewey. As a leader in the battle against the isolationists within the Republican party, he knows what he is talking about. And in an interview with Life, Governor Dewey made plain his conviction that the U.S. is fast approaching a crisis. Within the next 60 days, he says, this country will have to reach decisions which will result either in the loss of Europe and the eventual loss of freedom here, or in victory.

If the isolationists in Congress fail now to slow or halt the dispatch of troops to Europe, Governor Dewey fully expects the Soviets to launch a peace offensive involving concessions in Korea and Germany. The result, of course, would be to strengthen enormously the hand of those men who are trying to sell the country on the discredited policy of security within the hemisphere. And a victory for the Taft-Hoover crowd would effectively destroy Western Europe's will to resist.

The present lull should fool no one. Our national resolve to meet the Soviet challenge is our greatest asset. But only vigilance can preserve it.

ONCE UPON A NICKEL

We invite the attention of Mobilizer Wilson, Stabilizer Johnston and Controller Di Salle to a new popular song. In fact, every official who has anything to do with inflation should listen to Once Upon a Nickel. Here's how it goes:

Once upon a nickel you could really buy A cake of soap, a good cigar, a piece of apple pie, A subway ride, an ice cream cone,

And for a nickel you could phone. Those were the good old days.

P.S. Jukebox operators are now talking about raising their price to a dime.

In his widely read book of a generation ago, America Comes of Age, André Siegfried created a stereotype of this country which has stuck firmly in the world's mind ever since. His picture has been overlaid with Marxist and other daubings, but essentially we appear to the Europeans of 1951 much as we appeared to Siegfried in 1925. The picture is that of a materialistic, Fordized, gadget-studded, Negro-tyrannizing, unstable, careless, soulless, good-natured Goliath, "the New Carthage," half barbarous and half decadent.

This picture is still as much a part of Europe's mental furniture as Gilbert Stuart's version of George Washington is of ours. It causes Europeans to low-rate America and it enfeebles their resolution against the Soviet threat.

It would be all to the good if we could somehow shatter this stale, distorted stereotype and give our friends a truer picture to hang in their cafes. The Voice of America and other propaganda agencies try to do this, but it is uphill work. And one reason is that it's a long time since we Americans have had a good picture taken. There have been plenty of snapshots, showing us in various stages of trouble, transition or disarray. But who, even in America, can really state convincingly what America represents today, what motivates its people, what we are really like?

Well, the attempt is being made; among others, by LIFE from week to week; and recently our sister magazine Fortune devoted a whole issue (February) to it. As one reader put it, that issue of Fortune (which will soon be republished in book form by Prentice-Hall) was "a very great contribution to the ... self-analysis this country is now going through."

FORTUNE's big point is the tremendous rate of recent social change in the U.S. This change did not stop with the New Deal and the war; it has been proceeding rapidly since. For example, take our Negro problem. It is a long way from solved, but it is also a long way from where it was even 10 years ago. Says FORTUNE: "As illiteracy fell to 11%, the American Negro population was estimated to be only a generation behind the rest of the nation, educationally, and thus to have achieved the fastest cultural rise of any race in history." As for the class warfare on which the '30s cast so strong a spotlight, FORTUNE finds that this is virtually over; a new pattern of labor-management teamwork (especially at the crucial factory level) is rapidly becoming the norm. Along with this has gone the usual fantastic rise in our standard of living. Just recently the Labor Department's basic cost-of-living index, the measure of customary expenditures for "moderate income families," was revised to include television sets, home permanent wave lotions and group hospitalization contracts.

The reason for such continuing social change is inherent in what FORTUNE calls "The American Proposition." This is nothing more or less than the principles of 1776, which FORTUNE asserts boldly (if unfashionably) are as valid and operative today as they ever were. "It is a time for fundamentals: the crisis is such that there must be no doubt in anyone's heart concerning them."

What are these fundamentals? Above all, that every human being is endowed by his Creator with certain natural rights. "The human individual is clothed with them and no other man or group of men is entitled by God's law to strip them from him." To protect and implement these natural rights, we in America have employed three principles of political science which FORTUNE calls "a word, a tendency and a method." The word is liberty; the tendency, equality; the method, constitutionalism.

Individual liberty is still our touchstone, and can be asserted successfully before the courts against heavy odds.

Equality of rights has given our laws a bias toward equality of condition, but without bringing us any closer to despotism than pessimists thought we were in 1787 and 1850.

Constitutionalism is the flexible method by which we keep reconciling liberty and equality. It is, among other things, a constant check on the powers of the government, and a belief that "self government is better than good government." One of FORTUNE's most interesting articles ("The Busy Busy Citizen") shows how the important work and decisions of American life are still performed without reference to the government, on the initiative of millions of conscientious private citizens and groups whose names don't appear in the headlines.

This three-fold system, Fortune maintains, is still working to solve every important social problem we face. It is even solving that most awesome of 20th Century dilemmas, the individual vs. the machine. This is being done chiefly inside that new autonomous social unit, that peerless organizer of free effort, the modern corporation—which, for the purpose, has developed a measure of social conscience which has literally transformed American capitalism. "A true industrial democracy is emerging"—one already as different from what Europeans mean by "capitalism" as Charlie Wilson is from Daniel Drew.

If most Americans recognize FORTUNE's portrait as a true one and keep trying to improve on it, it may eventually replace the old stereotype. But a portrait that is true in 1951 will not be true in 1961; we will have to keep up-dating it every few years. For the very nature of the American Proposition is that it can never be frozen in time. America is not an achievement but a process-"a process of becoming." FORTUNE calls ours "The Permanent Revolution"-permanent because the human spirit, which the American Proposition seeks to liberate, is by definition limitless. Hence our quest is ongoing and neverending; in pursuit of freedom "we have yet to gain much more than we have won," and always will have.

The American Proposition is also a universal proposition: "We cannot by ourselves reach these higher aspects of freedom; we can reach them only if . . . we can learn to share it with other peoples of the earth. For it belongs to all mankind."

ATLANTA, GA. KNITS UP THE RAVELED SLEEVE OF CARE

The lifeless people stretched out above in the Atlanta, Ga. YMCA are not disaster victims or stiffs in a morgue, but simply a group of local businessmen and housewives studying the gentle art of sleep. Their undershirted instructor, J. A. Kennedy, is a former warrant officer who, during World War II, taught Navy aviators how to relax. This winter Kennedy noted new tensions right at home in Atlanta. "If people don't relax and get some decent sleep," he observed critically, "they'll all end up with spastic colons."

To teach overwrought Atlantans how to relax, Kennedy has started public classes in falling asleep. One hundred and twenty-six "students," including a muscle-bound weightlifter who tensed up during his meets, crowded into the auditorium for bedside instruction. First, Kennedy told them to clench fists and feel the effects of tension. Then he ordered them to loosen their belts, breathe slowly and blot all imagery from their minds. "Think of nothing," he said. By this time 20 people dozed off, and several somnolent students were snoring loudly. Kennedy was quickly booked for demonstrations at the Atlanta Optimists' Club, the Businessmen's Club and the Lions Club of La Grange, Ga.

KILLERS, CLOWNS, BAD ACTORS

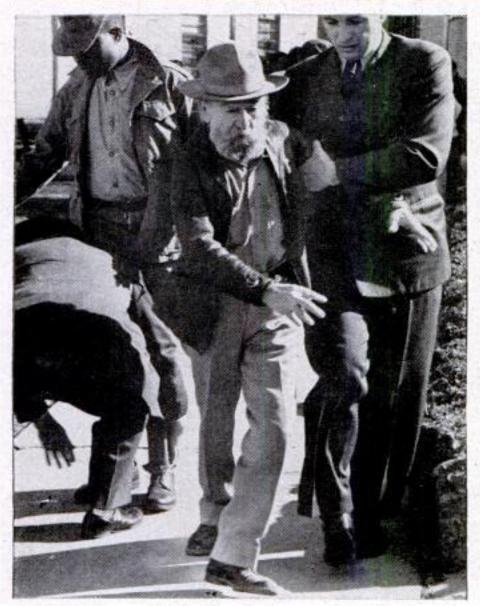

HANDCUFFED TOGETHER, two prisoners, both "maximum security" cases always kept under heavy guard, walk out of old jail to climb into the Black Maria.

CONVICT CARAVAN heads for new jail. Some 185 state, county and city policemen stood guard.

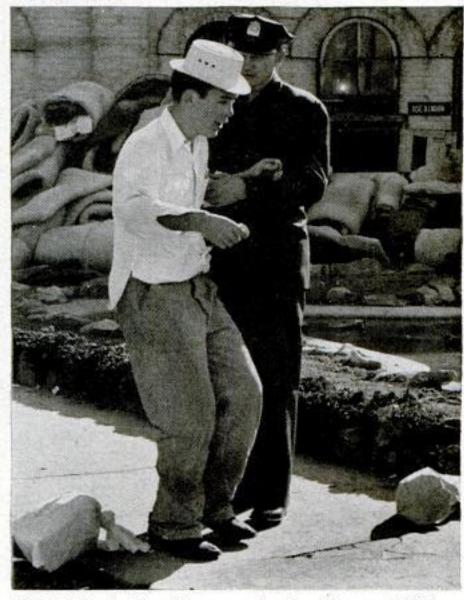

ON THE BUS RIDE the prisoners laugh and joke. Riding in each of the buses was one unarmed guard who stood up beside the driver with a walkie-talkie radio.

LIFER Hyrum BeBee heads for new jail. He is prison's oldest inmate and insists on keeping his beard.

MURDERER Joe Trujillo is searched on leaving. He must die, has his choice of being shot or hanged.

CLOWN of trip, when searched, tells guard "That tickles." During the ride he gave imitation of F.D.R.

BAD MEN GAILY MOVE TO GOOD HOME

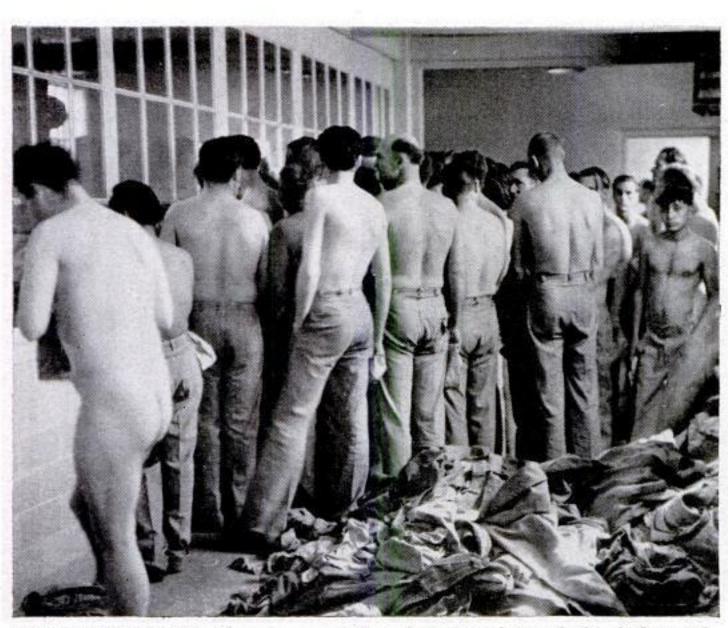

Early one morning last week a remarkable procession wound through Salt Lake City and out of town. First, guarded by six police cars with wailing sirens, came a locked-up Black Maria. Next, covered by a circling spotter plane and 30-odd more cars of shotgun-armed police, came city transit buses full of laughing men. It was one of the biggest prison moves in U.S. history; 433 convicts were being shipped from the old Utah State Prison, known as "Sugar House," to a brand-new $3.5 million prison called Point of the Mountain.

The convicts in the buses were in a festive mood. They yelled at passing motorists, razzed the guards, cracked jokes, and one insisted on plunking a dime in the bus coin slot. Sugar House, which they were leaving, was a stinking, dark, rat-infested building, more than 100% overcrowded. In it men slept in filth in boiler rooms and passageways, and 40 men shared a single toilet. Before they had left Sugar House they had broken its windows and ripped apart whatever they could. At Point of the Mountain each would have a separate cell, toilet and even a radio plug-in. To those in the Black Maria the change made the least difference. Some were bad actors, always under heavy guard, and others were only shifting from one death house to another. Still, even they could feel the school'sout atmosphere. Condemned killer Ray Gardner entered the new prison like the rest, was stripped, was examined minutely and was put through a hot shower and given new clothing. But in spite of this careful search he still managed to bring to his cell the dome light of the Black Maria, which he had stolen for an ash tray.

END OF TRIP for Black Maria (above) is gleaming prison, 20 miles from town near Wasatch Range.

AT THE NEW JAIL the prisoners strip and are issued new clothes before picking up their sterilized bedding. Said one, "In 13 years I've never had it so good."

OFF TO NEW CELLS go the prisoners. Sunlight, cleanliness and, most of all, the change of scene will cheer them for a while before the monotony sets in again.

IRANIAN NATIONALIST MULLAH SHAMAS ABADI, ONE OF WHOSE FANATICAL GROUP SHOT PREMIER, EXHORTS 30,000 OF HIS BROTHER MOSLEMS IN TEHERAN

DARK DAYS IN IRAN

A wise premier's murder gives the West some grave worries The black look of mourning and the blacker look of trouble darkened the streets and ancient mosques of Teheran. Here, in the capital of oil-rich Iran, next door to Russia, an able premier, Ali Razmara, lay dead at the hand of a fanatical Moslem assassin. The act fanned the smoldering fires of Iranian antiforeign feeling, brought a death threat to the newlywed young shah (Life, Feb. 26) and gave the West a monumental new worry. Iran's Majlis (lower house) responded to Razmara's murder by reversing a decision taken in January under his leadership: it voted unanimously for nationalization of the Anglo-Iranian Oil Co. This gigantic enterprise, 53% owned by Britain's government since 1914 when Winston Churchill foresaw its value as oil supplier for the Royal Navy, is the largest oil producer in the Middle East and source of 6% of the world's oil supply. The Majlis unrealistically hopes that Iran can find the funds and formula for taking over the half-billion-dollar operation. Anglo-Iranian, with a lease until 1993, will probably counter by offering higher oil royalties for Iran. Meanwhile, reflecting the Kremlin's delight with events, Iran's Red underground has come up to enjoy Teheran's explosive atmosphere (below, right).

HOW NOVELLO BECAME NATIONAL HEART THROB

HIS PROFILE, which admirers in Britain contended was the equal of John Barrymore's, was the view Novello most often turned to camera.

HIS WAR SERVICE as a British flying officer during World War I coincided with wide popularity of his song Keep the Home-Fires Burning.

"THE RAT," one of Novello's early hits, opened in London in 1924, ran a year and later was filmed. He not only took the lead but was coauthor.

THE SEQUEL, The Return of the Rat, in which Novello appeared with the U.S. motion picture actress, Mae Marsh, proved another smash hit.

LEERING at his costar, Constance Collier, Novello impersonated Italian Artist Benvenuto Cellini in The Firebrand. It was one of his few flops.

PEERING into distance, Novello posed in garden setting for a New York society photographer while he was on his way to visit Hollywood.

FIRST TIME Novello wore stage uniform was for Old Heidelberg in 1925. Acclaim led him to don similar costumes in many of his later plays.

was still in character and in uniform at age of 58. He appeared as ruler of an imaginary European kingdom.

FANS OF DEAD ACTOR INSPECT FLORAL SPRAYS

BRITISH LOSE AN IDOL

Actor-author-songwriter-producer Novello is dead

The flower-covered grounds of Golders Green Crematorium in London were crowded one day this month with some of England's greatest theatrical figures, a few men and 5,000 tearful women. Ivor Novello was dead. Though little known in the U.S., he had been for 30 years one of the greatest of England's matinee idols, as soulful as Valentino, as dashing as John Barrymore. Sophisticated theatergoers were inclined to look on him as a schmaltzy Noel Coward. Like Coward, he not only acted but also wrote many of the plays he appeared in, and produced them, and wrote the music too. His most famous song was Keep the Home-Fires Burning, the sentimental hit tune of World War I. But at his funeral service the organ played another of his songs that had been sung by millions, We'll Gather Lilacs, and mourners wept into the sprays of white lilac they wore in remembrance.

GREENGLASS IN NEW YORK'S U.S. COURTHOUSE

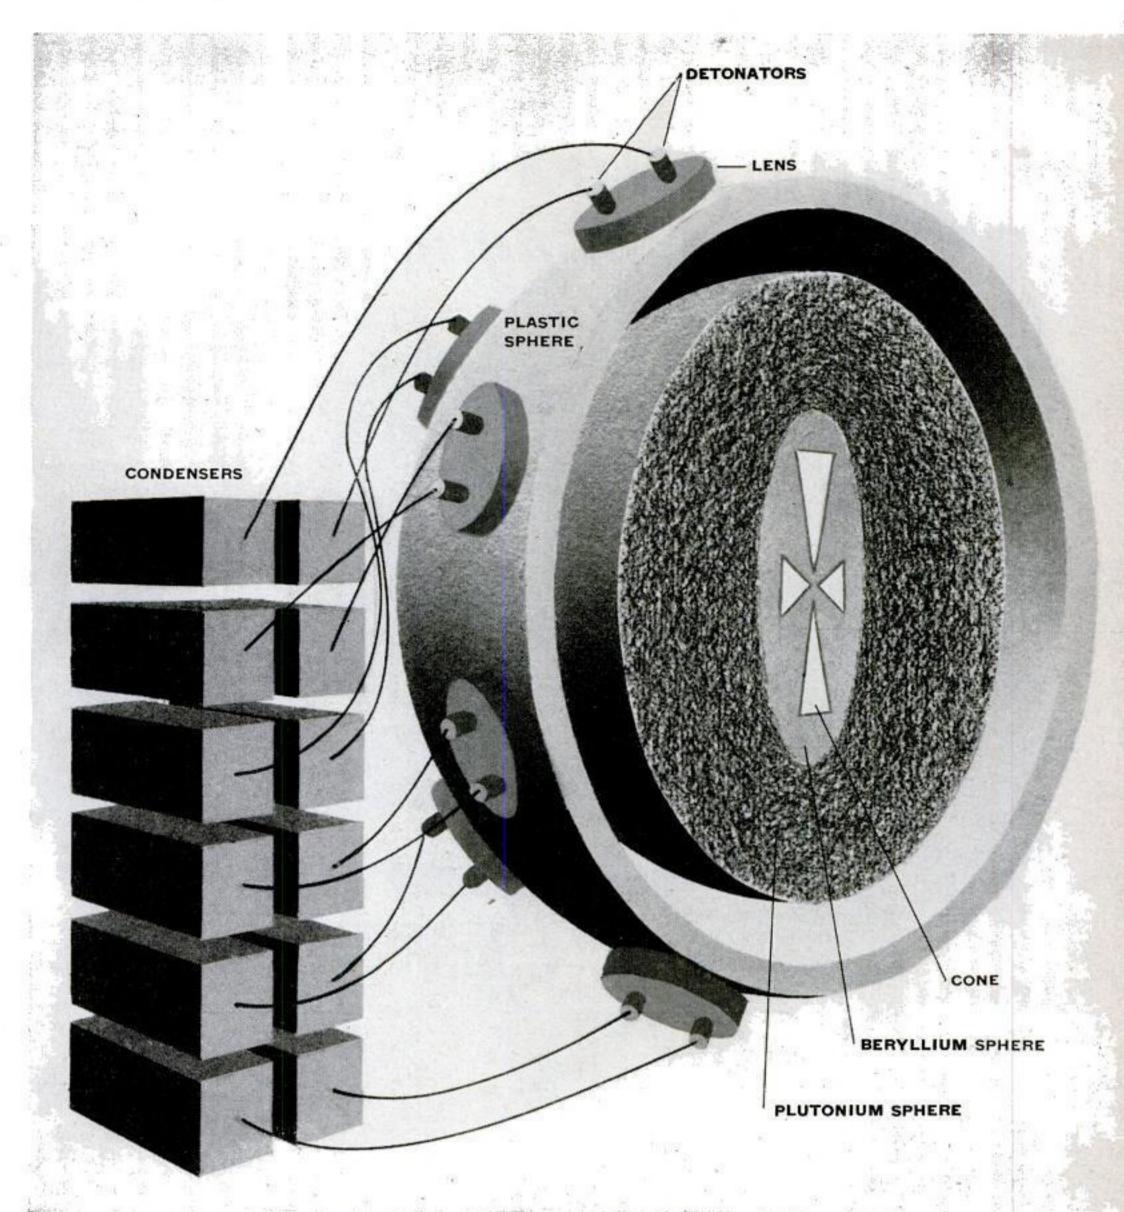

SPY'S VERSION OF THE A-BOMB

This is what Sergeant Greenglass had given the Russians in 1945

In Manhattan's District Courthouse last week a mild-looking young man quietly revealed to a federal jury and members of the press details of this nation's most closely guarded and worst kept secret: the mechanism of an atomic bomb. Ex-spy, ex-Army Sergeant David Greenglass, acting as a government witness, was restating the data which he says he gave to Julius and Ethel Rosenberg and Harry Gold more than five years ago. Gold, who is believed to have transmitted this material to Anatoli Yakovlev, a member of the Russian consulate in New York, has been convicted of espionage. The Rosenbergs and their accomplice, Morton Sobell, are now being tried on the same charge.

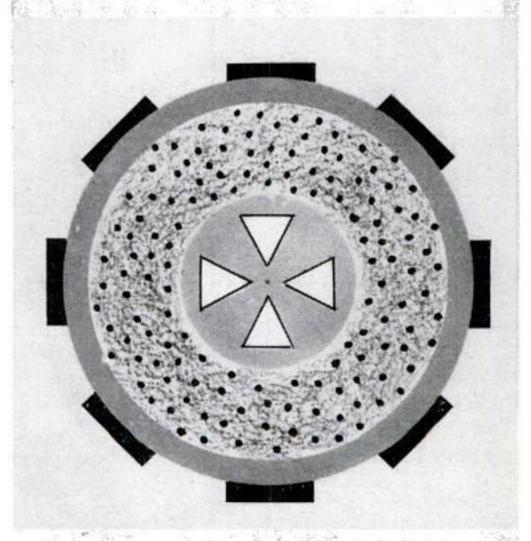

As chief of a Los Alamos machine shop Greenglass helped to build and design parts of the bomb mechanism. He was also able to gather information about many of its other vital components. From this information he drew up a number of sketches which he gave to the Rosenbergs. It was one of these sketches, redrawn from memory, that Greenglass held in his hand and described in a few minutes of terse testimony.

The bomb mechanism that Greenglass described consists of a series of concentric spheres (top, right). The outer sphere is made of plastic. It surrounds a sphere of plutonium. Within the plutonium is a sphere of beryllium. In the center of the beryllium are gold-plated cones. Surrounding the entire composite structure is a network of 36 high explosive "lenses," each with two detonators. Each detonator is connected to a condenser. The condensers are wired together so that they can all be triggered at the same moment by a single switch. Greenglass explained that the plastic sphere serves to protect

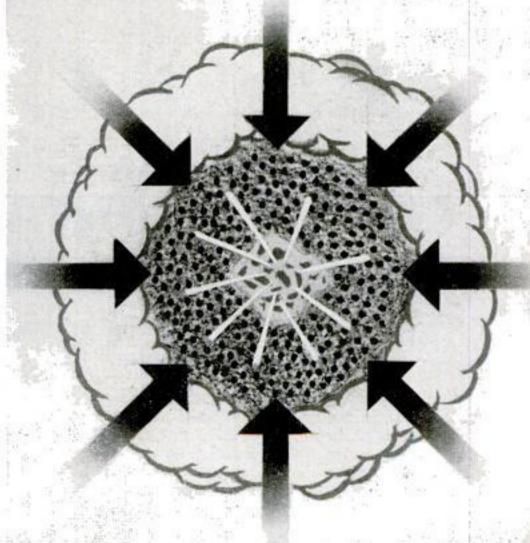

GREENGLASS'S VERSION of bomb, as he described it verbally in court, is outlined in the schematic drawing above. At bomb's center is a beryllium sphere containing gold-plated cones. Around this is a larger sphere of plutonium. High-explosive

"lenses" (36 in all) surround the plutonium sphere and are shielded from it by a plastic shell. The lenses contain pairs of detonators, each of which is connected to a condenser. All the lenses are exploded simultaneously to produce an "implosion" (below).

HOW "IMPLOSION" MAY WORK is shown in these two drawings. At left is the bomb mechanism before the explosive lenses are set off. The plutonium sphere is porous so that its volume is greater than that of solid plutonium. When the lenses are detonated (right) the plutonium sphere is evenly compressed by the great inward force of the implosion. It is also irradiated by the neutrons now streaming from its beryllium core. When the plutonium mass is squeezed down to normal density, it will immediately explode.

the high explosive from the plutonium (which is a highly corrosive substance) and that the beryllium core acts as a source of neutrons. The gold-plating, he added, prevents the accidental discharge of neutrons before the bomb is fired.

In discussing the detonation of the bomb Greenglass referred to a principle which is not at all familiar to the general public, the principle of implosion, which is the key to the weapon's operation. Unlike a simple explosion, which exerts force outward, an implosion is a precisely controlled explosion which directs its pressure inward—in this case upon the plutonium sphere. The explosive lenses are so constructed that their individual shock waves combine to form a single concave wave front that exerts enormous but generally equal pressure over the whole surface of the sphere. This implosion, said Greenglass, detonates the plutonium by "compressing it to a hypercritical mass." It also compresses the beryllium core, collapsing the gold-plated cones and releasing a flow of neutrons.

At first glance Greenglass's implosion bomb appears illogical, if not downright unworkable. There seem to be two things wrong with it. 1) It contains only one mass of plutonium and 2) it contains an apparently useless neutron source. Ever since the first atomic explosion it has been generally believed that an A-bomb is set off by bringing together two small masses of fissionable material-plutonium or uranium 235-to form one mass large enough to explode spontaneously. (All atomic explosions occur through chain reaction: a neutron splits an atom, releasing two neutrons which split two more atoms, and so on by geometrical progression until uncontrolled fission takes place. In a small mass neutrons escape without striking enough atoms to create a chain reaction. But in a larger "critical" mass the number of collisions is great enough to start and sustain a chain reaction and cause an explosion.) The two-piece type of bomb, according to Greenglass's testimony, was dropped on Hiroshima but was then abandoned in favor of the implosion type.

YAKOVLEV GOT SPY REPORTS

Despite its total dissimilarity to the Hiroshima weapon a singlesphere bomb could work and work efficiently. The single sphere could probably not be made of solid, metallic plutonium. For if this were less than the critical mass it could not be exploded, and if it were of more than critical size it would explode spontaneously. But if a critical mass were diluted-with air, for example-it would not explode. Its volume would be increased and its density lowered; its atoms would be more widely scattered and the stray neutrons passing through it could not start a chain reaction. Yet if this porous or spongy mass were compressed down to normal density, it would explode instantly. And the force of implosion could probably compress it to that extent. A second possibility is that the sphere Greenglass mentions is actually a largerthan-critical mass split into two slightly separated subcritical hemispheres. The two parts would be crushed together by the implosion into a single mass which would explode. As for the neutron source—the central beryllium sphere—Greenglass's testimony explains neither how it works nor why it is needed. But the explanations of its operation and purpose seem to be fairly apparent. Beryllium itself does not emit neutrons, but it will do so when bombarded with alpha particles from another source, such as polonium, a radioactive element. Polonium could be contained in the goldplated cones which Greenglass has described as being located within the beryllium. The gold plating would block off the alpha radiation as long as the cones were intact and would thus prevent a discharge of neutrons from the beryllium. But when collapsed by the implosion, the shattered cones would release alpha particles, and neutron radiation would begin. This extra radiation is not necessary since the plutonium mass would explode of its own accord when it reached the critical stage. The function of the neutron source, therefore, may be to increase the force of the explosion. It could do this by speeding up the start of the fission process through neutron bombardment and cutting perhaps a millionth of a second off the time it would normally take for the chain reaction to develop. As a result of this the nuclear explosion would be pressing outward while the force of the implosion was still pressing inward. The implosive force would momentarily contain and hold back the nuclear reaction, allowing it to become more intense before it diffused into the surrounding air. Perhaps the great increase in power in recent A-bombs over the earliest models is the result of this process.

In Washington today, every minute counts. Government and business leaders just can't afford to take slow means of travel. That's why so many fly by Douglas DC-6. These giant airliners cruise high "above the weather" at more than 300 m.p.h. They cut travel time and fatigue to the minimum.

Paris, like other capitals of western Europe, is an important destination for Americans. Likewise, more and more European officials and businessmen are finding it imperative to visit America. Fortunately, it's only an overnight trip by Douglas DC-6.

Chicago can be quickly reached by air from every direction. Many businessmen go and return the same day. For example, by DC-6 it's just a little over an hour from Cincinnati or Detroit... a few minutes more from Cleveland or Kansas City. DC-6's span the country in just over 9 flying hours!

Today, every airplane being made in America is strengthening the fighting power of the free world.

Ninety per cent of Douglas production is for our armed forces. Douglas also continues to build its famous DC-6 transports. Like thousands of other Douglas airplanes, they will speed people and materials on essential work.

The free nations have the finest commercial air fleet in the world. At any time, these airplanes can be used for military work. They are truly our "second line of defense."

MUSEUM MOP-UP

Animals get their annual dusting in New York's famous "dead zoo"

The meanest assignment ever tackled by the mighty Hercules was that of tidying up a building full of animals. Last week in New York another Herculean project was under way which also involved cleaning a building full of animals. In this case the animals, exhibits in the American Museum of Natural History's "dead zoo," were conveniently lifeless. But each of the stuffed and skeletal specimens posed special problems to the museum's 135-man clean-up detail. The elephants were vacuumed and their tusks and toenails polished. The whales were swept off with 15-foot dusters. Technicians combed birds with cotton and brushed bugs with soft camel's hair. Agile attendants mounted long ladders to brighten the bones of towering dinosaurs. But there was one object which needed no cleaning. It was the outstretched paw of a bronze lion in the lobby, which had been rubbed bright by the inquisitive hands of every passing child.

WINDOWS OF LATE-WORKING SECRETARY-GENERAL'S OFFICE LOOK WEST OVER CITY FROM 38TH FLOOF

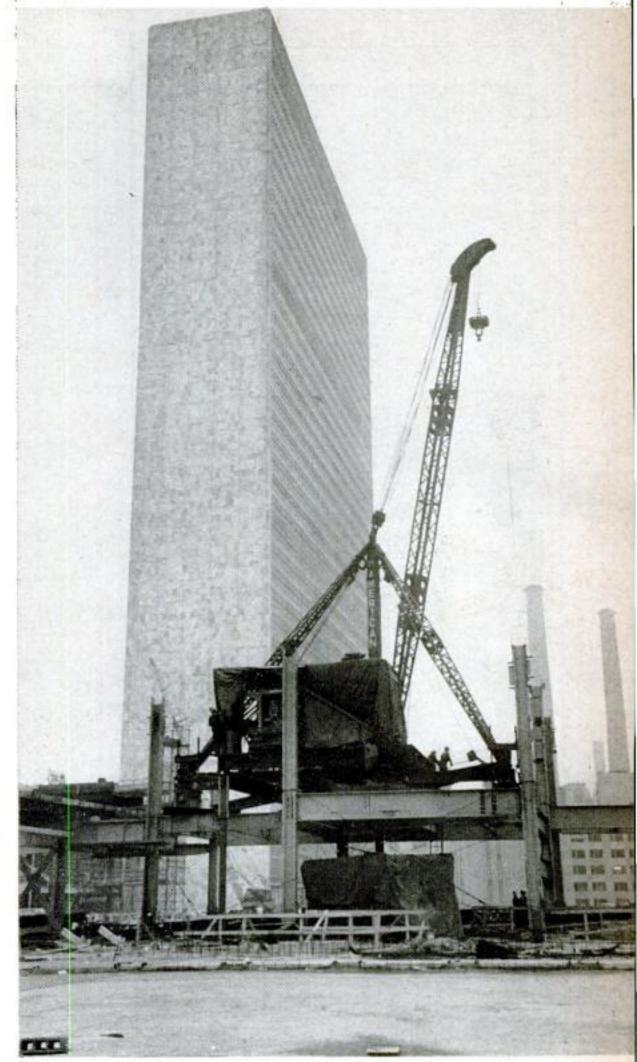

NEW LIGHTS IN NEW YORK

U.N.'s Secretariat Building takes its place on city's night skyline

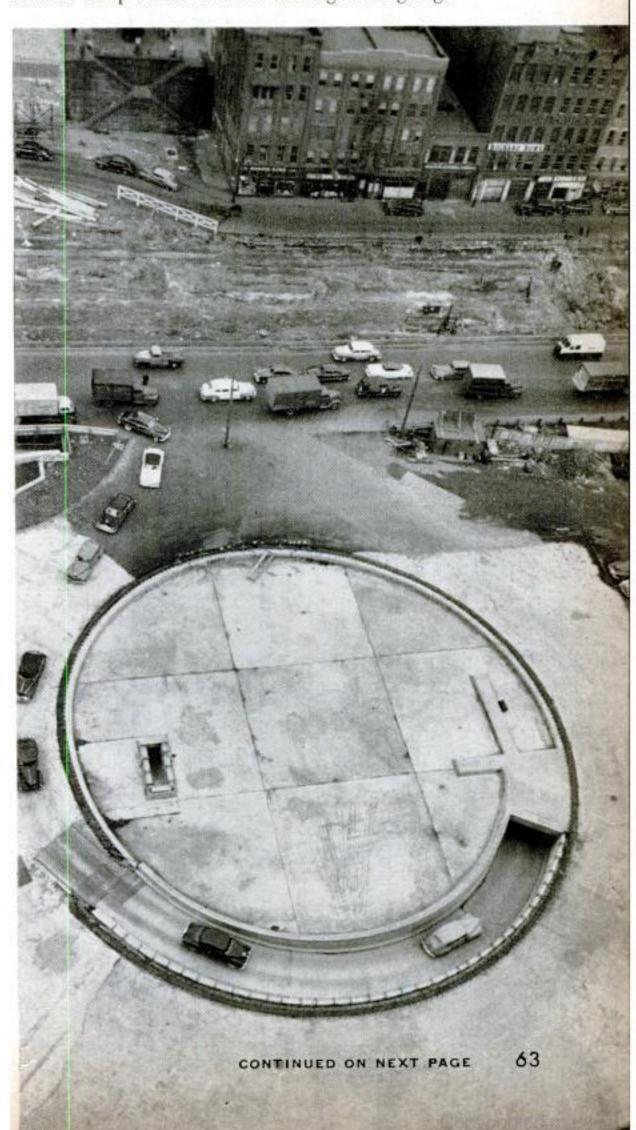

Amid the clutter and clatter of construction work still going on, the U.N. was beginning to get settled in its new and permanent home beside Manhattan's East River. The vast glass side of the 39-story Secretariat Building, lighted up after dark (opposite page), was taking a familiar place on New York's night skyline. Some 2,500 employes were already moved in. Nearing completion was the seven-story Meeting Hall, to which all conferences and meetings, now held at Lake Success, will be transferred in July. Basic steelwork was rising for the four-story Assembly Building scheduled, along with the landscaping, to be done in time for the next General Assembly in 1952.

In the neighborhood of the 17-acre site, from which tenements, slaughterhouses and breweries were razed, property values were reported nearly doubled, but there were still few visible signs of the new era. A few expensive restaurants had opened, but most of the U.N. staff ate in their own fifth floor cafeteria, brought lunches to work in paper bags or grabbed a bite at one of the nearby beaneries. Even the tourists and sightseers apparently had not discovered the new U.N. home, and only occasionally did one of them wander among the contractors' debris or into the marble lobby of the lofty Secretariat Building.

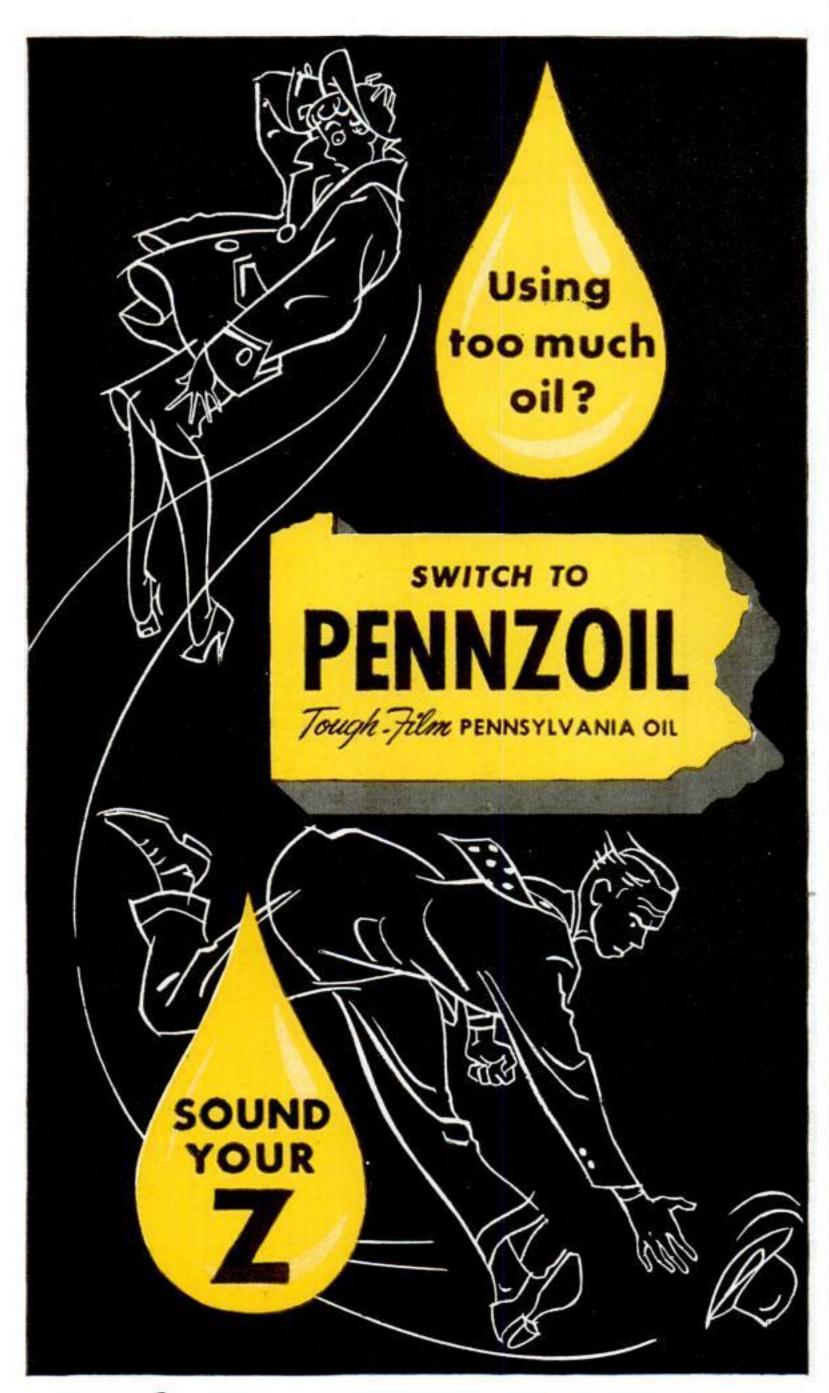

Officials expected more would be along when the weather warmed up and the big restaurant opened in the Meeting Hall this summer. Although there will be 4,000 employes working there by July, administrative officials said that there were at present no plans for air raid drills or precautions in the home of the United Nations. Probably alone of New York's big buildings the U.N. could not boast a SHELTER sign.

CHOIR OF CHERUBS

YOUNG CHORUS SINGS AT SPECIAL SERVICES

On Wednesday afternoons a chorus of squealings and chirpings emerges from St. Mark's Methodist Church in Brooklyn, N.Y. and passers-by know that the regular rehearsal of the church's Cherub Choir has begun. The choir is made up of 20 to 25 children between 2 and 5 years old, like the child on the cover. It starts practice with a few scales or rhythmic exercises. Sometimes the children sing lustily for an hour. Other times they begin fidgeting after 20 minutes. To keep them from poking and pinching each other while singing, Mrs. Cecile Jacobson, the director, makes them press their hands together in an attitude of prayer (above).

The actual performances—most important are at Christmastime and Palm Sunday—usually begin in confusion as each child looks for his parents and waves before assuming the prayerful position. But after they launch into an old favorite like Jesus Loves Me there is rarely any trouble, except that once a boy (far left, opposite page) who had practiced hymns on his rocking horse at home rocked back and forth so hard at a performance that he fell off the platform.

In 1950 your industry purchased approximately sixty million dollars worth of Hunt products for resale through retail channels.

This figure marks a new high in annual sales for Hunt Foods, Inc. It measures the growth of this company since 1942 when sales were less than ten million dollars.

The Reasons for This Growth

The reasons are simple: The quality of Hunt products has won a powerful and steadily increasing public demand. A demand which Hunt has stimulated through forceful and consistent advertising.

Some Hunt "Firsts"

FIRST to take fifty-two pages in Life Magazine in one year to advertise a single label. These advertisements reached approximately five million homes each week for a total of 260 million advertising messages.

FIRST to sponsor a five-times-per-week television program on a coast-to-coast network and kinescope system to advertise a single label. Every TV city in the United States has been ordered for Hunt on the Kate Smith Show.

FIRST to use more than a billion book matches in a year to advertise food products with recipes.

... and 1-2-3

As a result of these aggressive promotions of quality products, Hunt is now

FIRST in production and sales of TOMATO SAUCE.

SECOND in production and sales of CANNED PEACHES.

THIRD in production and sales of TOMATO CATSUP.

Quick Facts...

Hunt is the only food processor with almost all of its tin and glass containers made on its own properties.

In 1950, Hunt's working capital and net worth were each in excess of twenty million dollars. In 1943 net worth was less than three million dollars, and working capital approximately one million.

Hunt has processing plants on the Pacific Coast, in the Midwest and the East, producing a complete line of fruits, vegetables and tomato products.

Hunt's aggressive advertising of "spearhead" items will continue in 1951 on an even more powerful basis.

AN ALTARPIECE

OF THE

EASTER MIRACLE

Nine scenes are unfolded in panels on double wings of Grünewald masterwork

DIAGRAM OF ALTARPIECE shows how outer wings with painting of Crucifixion (pp. 76, 77) open to scenes of Christ's life on inner wings (pp. 82, 83). These fold back to show statue and paintings of St. Anthony (pp. 80, 81).

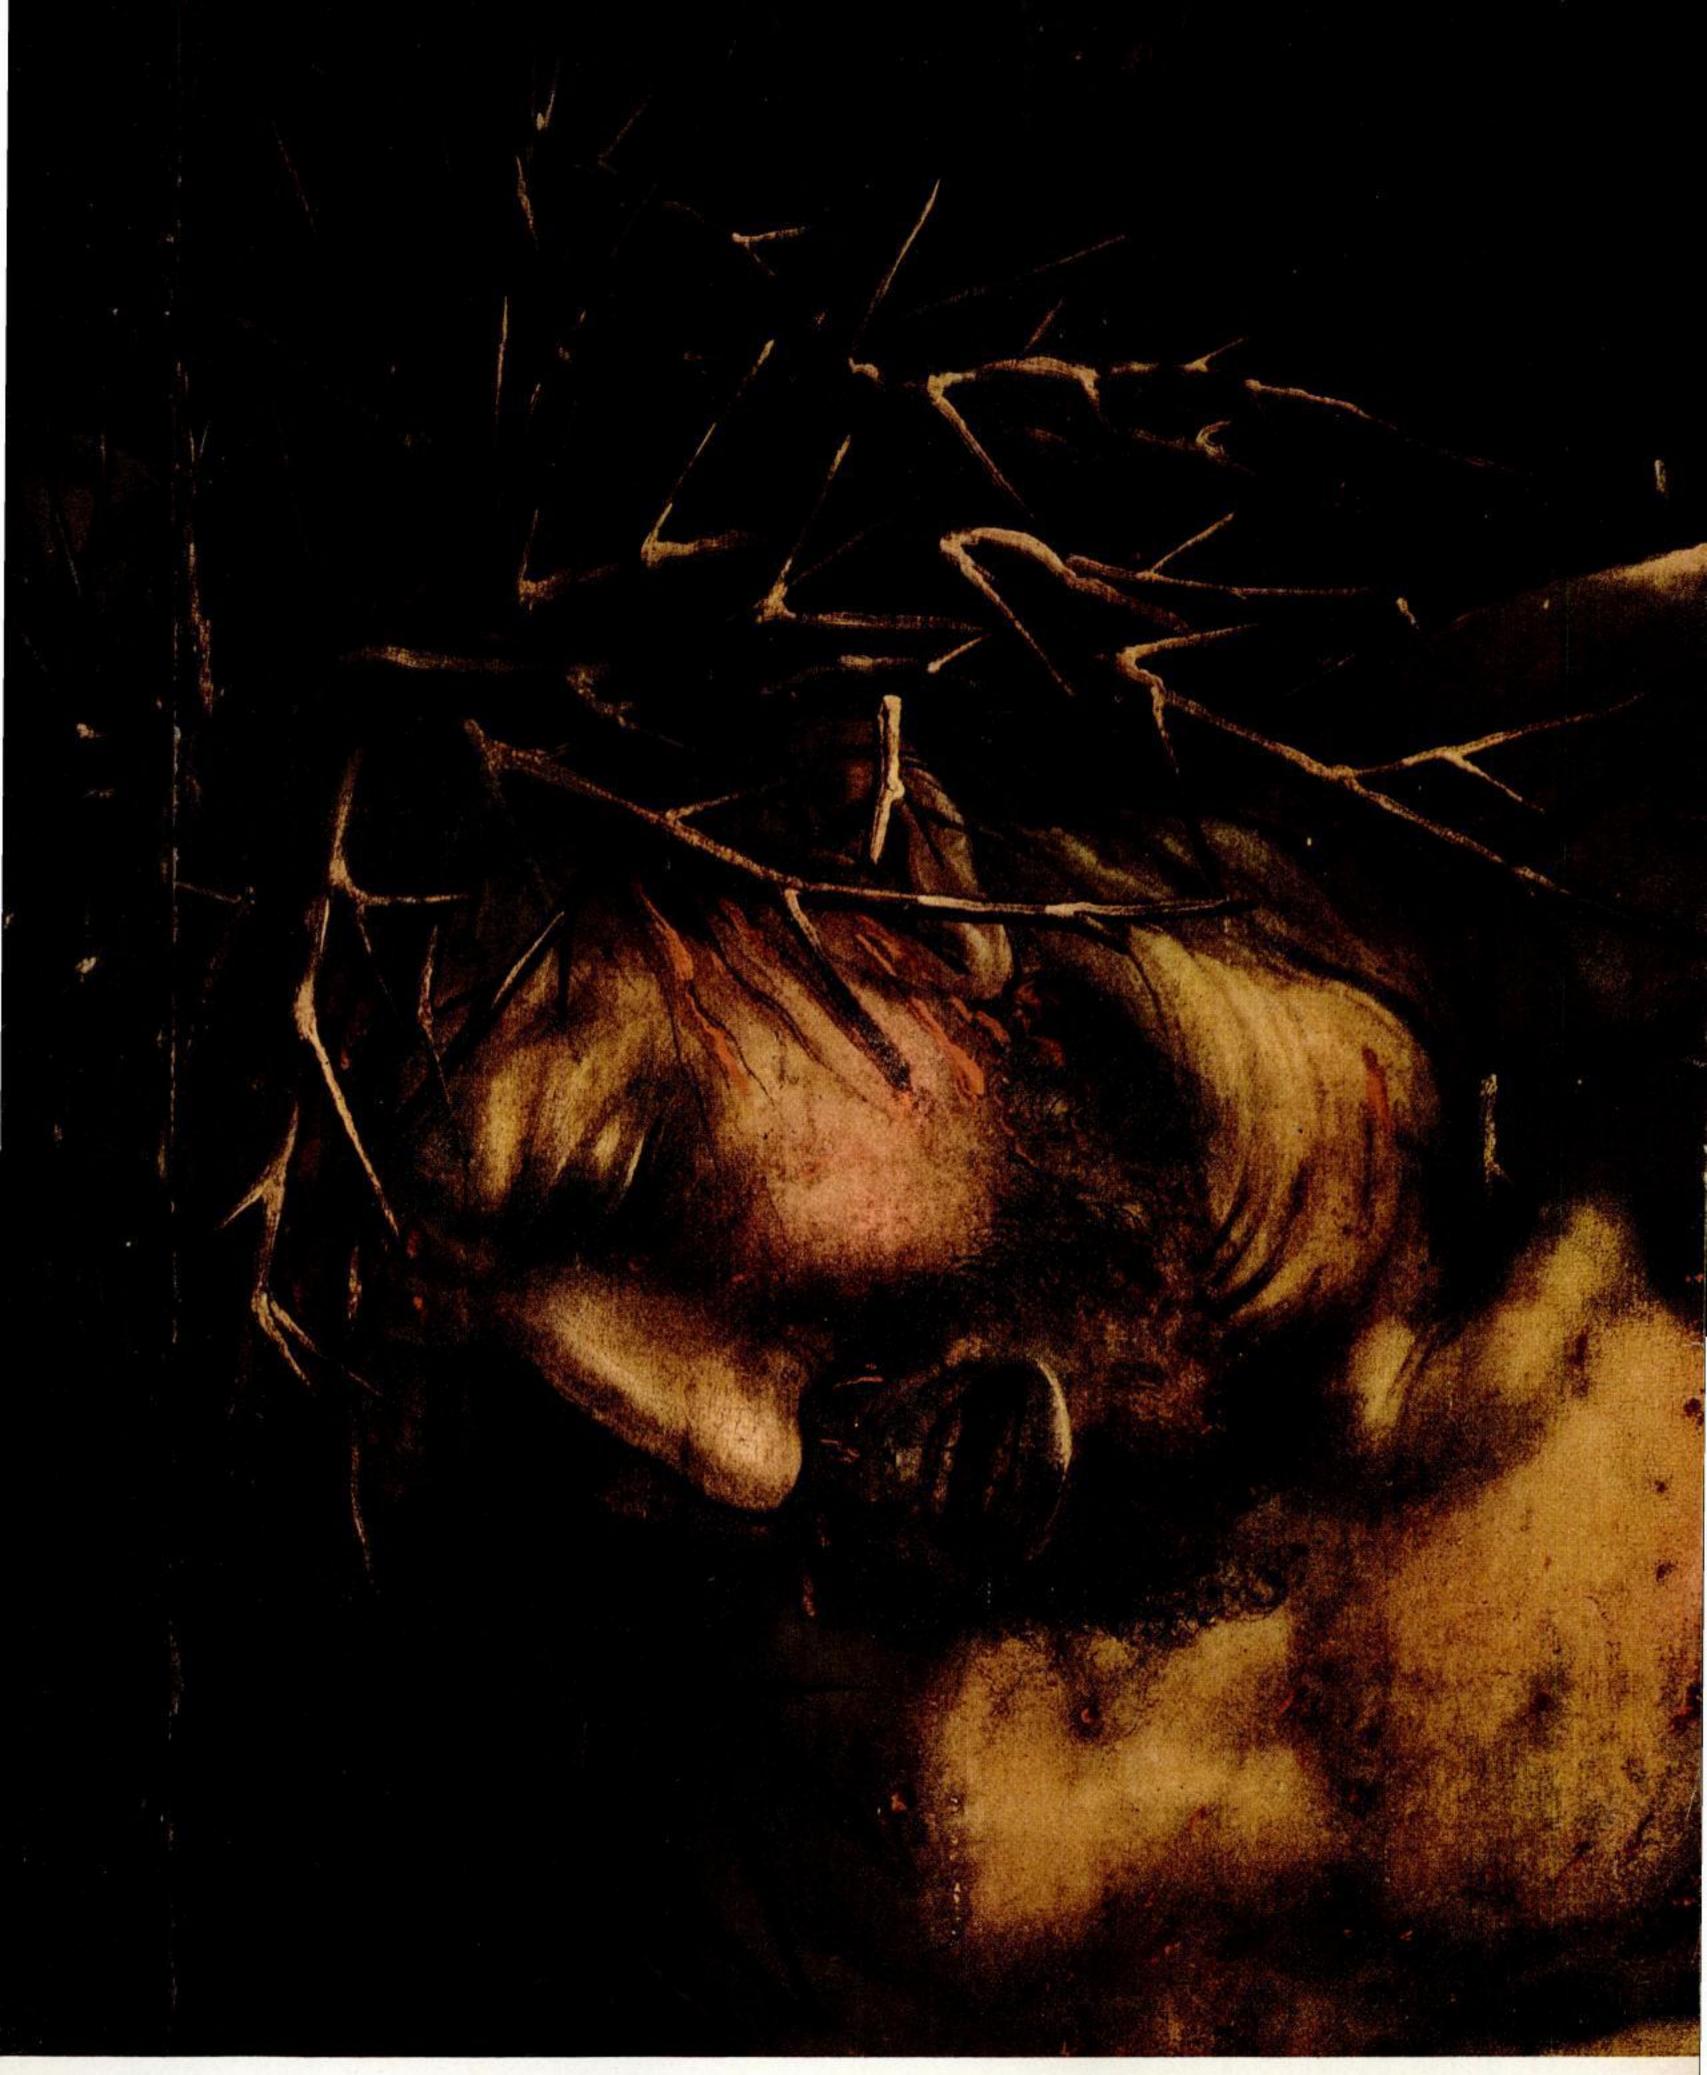

SELF-PORTRAIT OF GRÜNEWALD

AROUND 1510 a painter from the German town of Selingenstadt, near Frankfurt, traveled up the Rhine to Isenheim, a tiny village in Alsace. He had been called there by the prior of a convent to paint an altarpiece and there he worked earnestly for several years. By 1515 the altarpiece was finished and the painter had gone back to his workshop in Selingenstadt. Thirteen years later his death was briefly recorded in the archives of Halle, where he had been called to design a fountain. Gradually his work disappeared and what remained, like the altarpiece at Isenheim, was generally believed to have been done by his more famous contemporary, Albrecht Dürer. Even his name was lost when a German historian in 1675 erroneously called him Grünewald, the name by which he has been known ever since. Only in the past 30 years has his real identity been uncovered and the meager outline of his life pieced together from old documents.

Mathis Gothart Nithart, known as Grünewald, was born in Würzburg about 1465. In 1508 he became court painter to the archbishop of Mainz, and later to the archbishop's successor, Cardinal Albrecht of Brandenburg, whose sale of indulgences was attacked by Martin Luther in his revolutionary Ninety-five Theses. In the debate that raged between Church and reformer, Grünewald was won over by Luther and abruptly discharged by the cardinal. Three years later, in 1528, he died.

Of the 20 paintings and the handful of drawings that are left of Grünewald's lifework, his masterpiece is the Isenheim altar. Now in the Unterlinden Museum of Colmar, the 16-by-11-foot altarpiece is reproduced in its entirety on the following pages. In its awesome and brutal realism it conveys the stern outlook of the time, when wars and pestilence prompted a mood of pessimism. Grünewald shared the despair of his day, but he also possessed a mystical faith that stemmed from the religious fervor of the Middle Ages. The Antonite monks of Isenheim, for whom the altarpiece was painted, tended the victims of erysipelas, leprosy and other skin diseases. Realizing that the afflicted visitors to the convent would come to pray before the altarpiece, Grünewald painted on its outer wings a scene of utmost suffering, the Crucifixion of Christ, whose lacerated body (opposite page) resembled those of the diseased persons who knelt at the altar. But on the inner wings of the altarpiece he painted the triumph of the spirit over all earthly torments, the miracle of Christ's Resurrection in which lay man's own hope and deliverance.

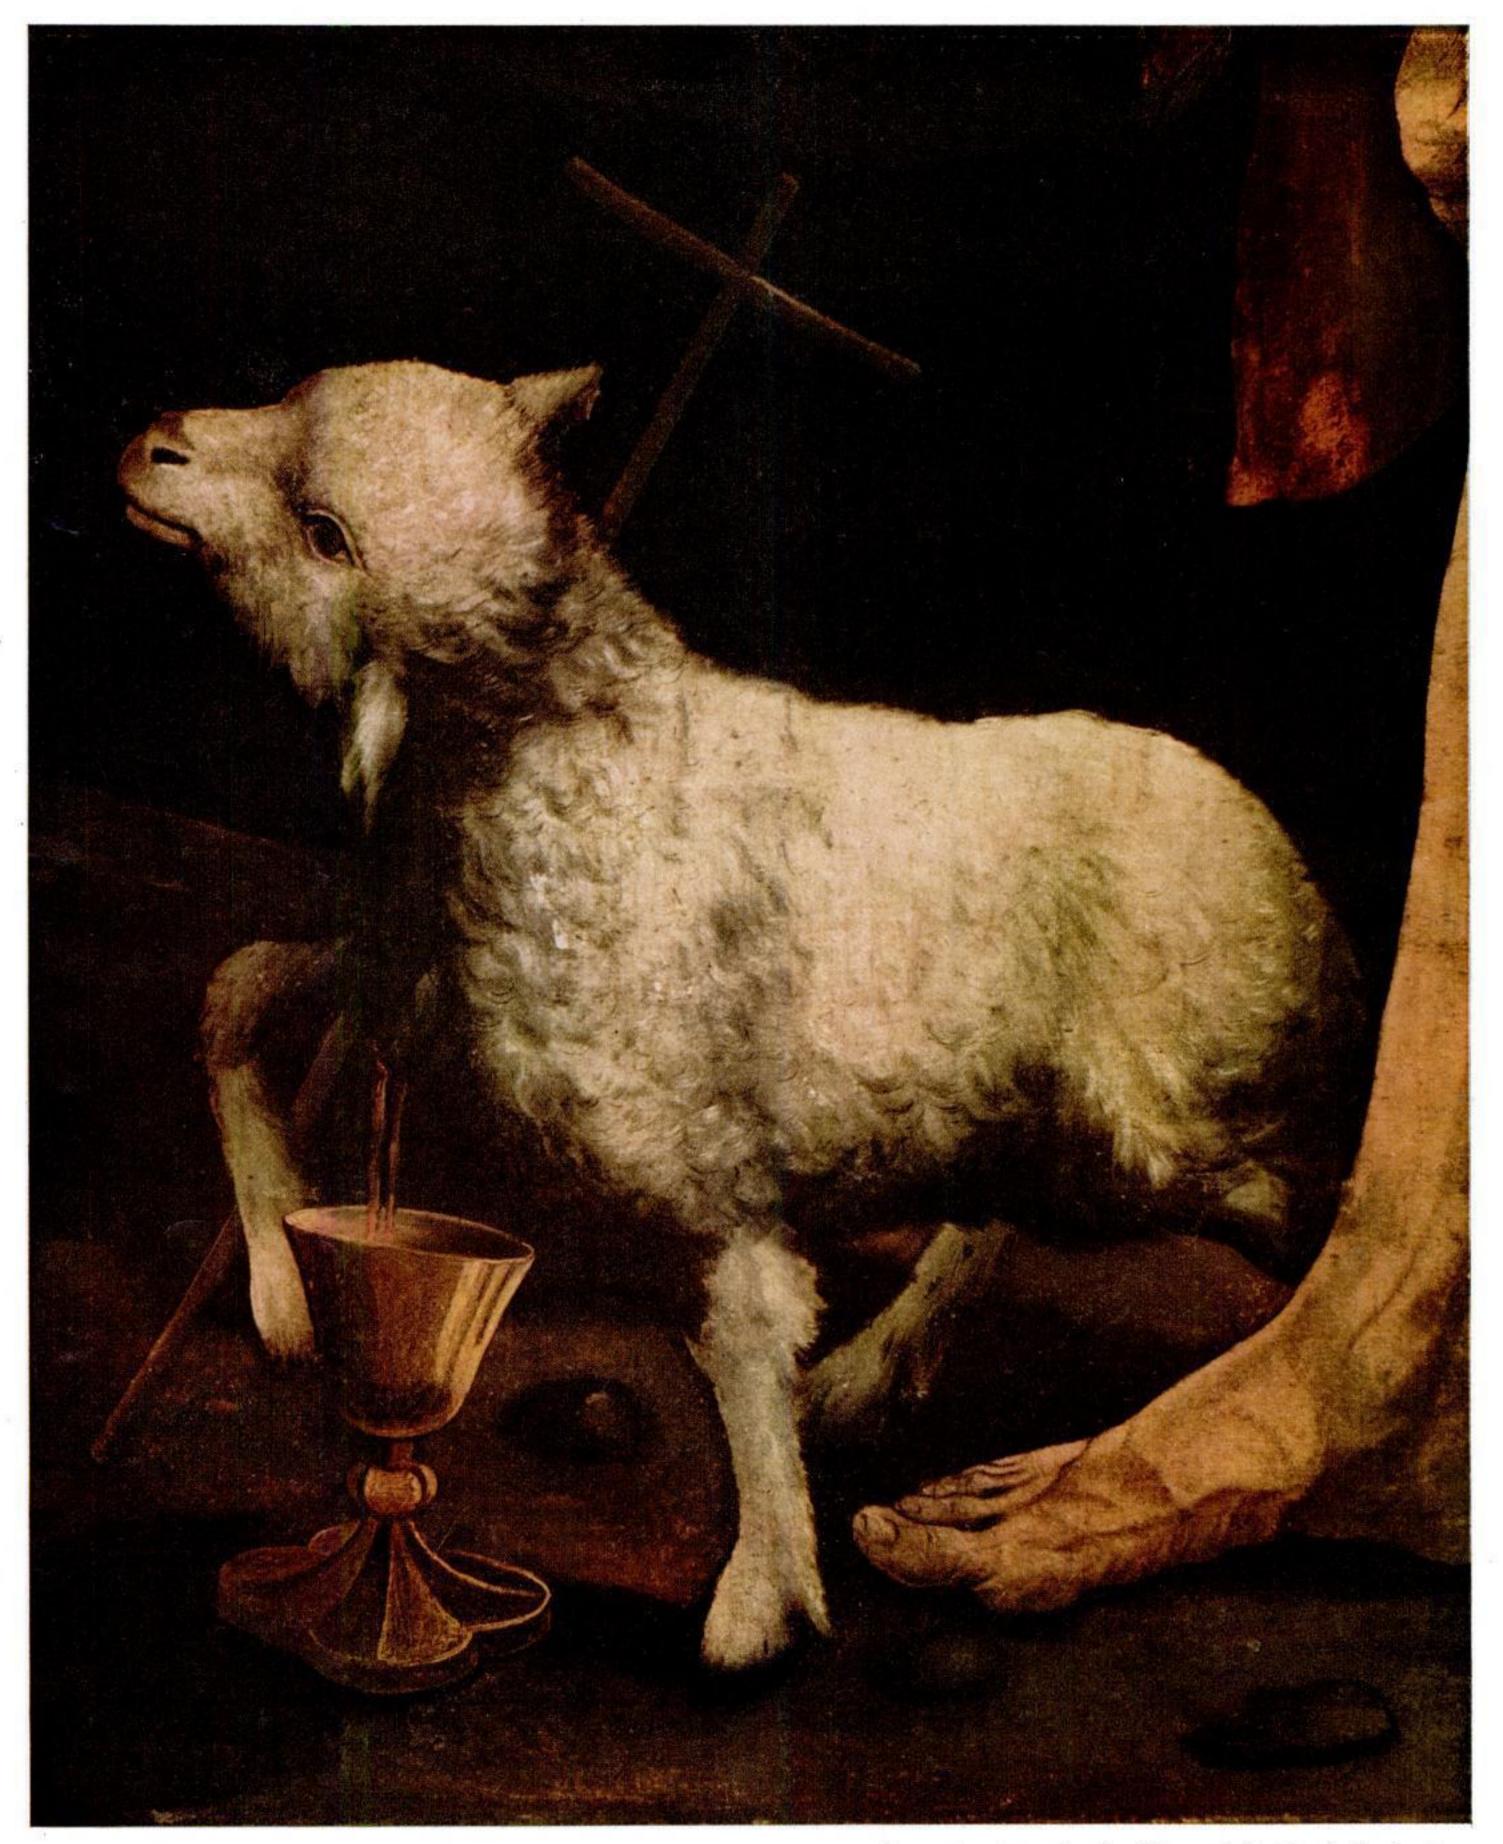

In death the face of Christ is twisted with the torment of his Crucifixion (next page). Thorns still stab his flesh, and his lips are parted in the despair of his final cry, "My God, why hast thou forsaken me?"

Christ "the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world."

Shrouded in the white mantle of purity, the Virgin (in detail from Crucifixion, preceding page) weeps as John, to whom Christ commended his mother, turns from the Cross in grief to comfort her.

A Eastertime, when the exterior wings were opened, the pervading gloom of the Crucifixion gave way to the jubilant radiance of the Incarnation and the Resurrection. With these paintings Grünewald lifted Christ from the degradation and misery of his human existence into the realm of the Spirit from which he came and to which he returned. Dramatizing the Gospel of St. John, "And the Word was made flesh, and dwelt among us," Grünewald portrayed in the panel at left the scene of the Annunciation, in which the Angel Gabriel appears to Mary as she prays in a small Gothic chapel. As Mary draws back in humility and awe, the pages of her Bible miraculously open to the prophecy of Isaiah: "Behold, a virgin shall conceive, and bear a son. . . ." In the arch above, the sculptured figure of the prophet seems to come alive to reaffirm his ancient words while over the curtain in the rear of the chapel hovers the dove of the Holy Spirit. In the central panel the Incarnation of the Spirit through the birth of Jesus has taken place, and a dazzling choir of angels rejoices with viols and celestial singing. In medieval fashion the artist depicted several events in the same picture. Within the shrine the Virgin, in an aura of light, worshipfully awaits the birth of Christ. At right, looking more like a simple German girl than a Madonna, she tenderly holds the newborn infant who toys with her rosary. At her feet is a crib and the wooden tub in which the baby has been bathed. Instead of the familiar rude stable a walled garden with roses, symbolic of her virginity, closes her in. Far in the distance a host of angels spill from the heavens bearing the tidings from God to the shepherds, who stand in amazement on the mountainside. The exuberance of the scene is clouded only by the cloth on which the infant is lying, ominous reminder of the tattered garment which would clothe him on the Cross. The ultimate triumph of Christ as he returns to the Spirit occurs in the Resurrection (right). No longer earthbound, he soars upward into the starry night, his body dissolving into the radiance of the Divine. Only the shroud threatens to fall back upon the tomb as the last remnant of his earthly substance.

A CRY of pain escapes the lips of St. Anthony, in detail from the Temptation. As monsters of Hell tear at his hair and trample his body, he lifts his arm to ward off blows of still another assailant.

A nation—finger their viols in heavenly concert as cherubs with auras like peacock feathers throng the dark recesses of the chapel.

AZZLED by the radiance that emanates from Christ, soldiers at the Resurrection fall back, helpless to impede Christ's miraculous liberation from the tomb in his predestined triumph over death.

A Personal Statement

On Saturday I saw a tremendously exciting play, "BILLY BUDD," at the Biltmore Theatre. It was about to close. Now it is continuing. I have nothing to do with the play, nothing to do with its management, its finances, its authors or its actors. But I do have something to do with the theatre as a profession and an art, and I do have something to do with all the people who like the theatre and who value its importance. I am paying out of my own pinched pocket the money it costs for this ad, to say to whoever reads it that "BILLY BUDD" is an exciting play, a moving play, a stimulating and a beautifully acted and staged play.

No one asked me to do this; it is entirely my own idea.

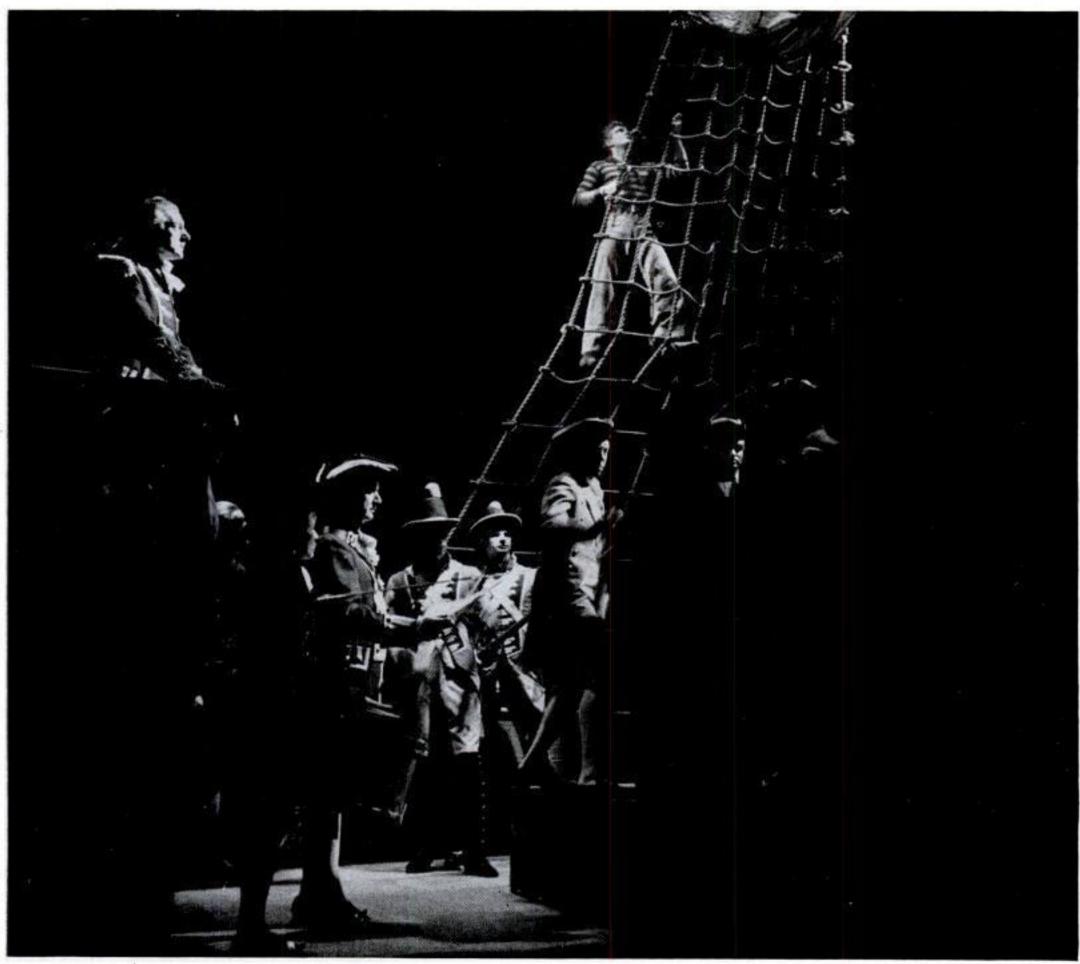

Herman Shumlin

THESE PRIVATELY PAID-FOR ADVERTISEMENTS APPEARED IN THE NEW YORK "TIMES"

"BILLY BUDD" REFUSES TO FOLD

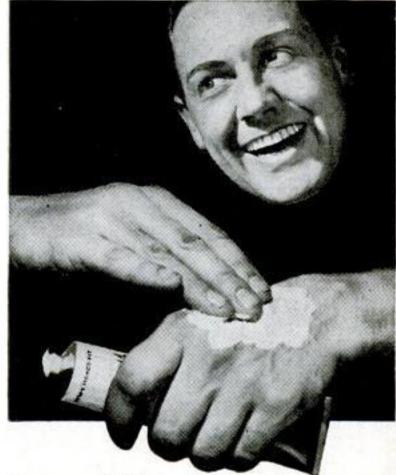

Normally, when a Broadway show gets ready to fold, it accepts its doom and dies quietly. But Billy Budd has shown far more spunk. The play, which opened last month, was adapted by Louis O. Coxe and Robert Chapman from Herman Melville's philosophical tale about an angelic young British seaman named Budd and a diabolic master-at-arms who destroy each other and thus prove Melville's thesis that absolute good and evil cannot exist in a world of compromise.

Most critics lauded the staging and acting, and some were downright rhapsodic about the play itself. But the public failed to buy tickets. On a Saturday night the show gave what was scheduled to be its last performance. On Sunday actors and producers got together, decided to try to keep Budd going. More money was put up and the actors took drastic salary cuts. Other Budd enthusiasts put ads in the paper (above). Schoolteachers urged their classes to see the play. Actor José Ferrer, starring in 20th Century, told audiences in a curtain speech not to miss Budd. As a result business perked up and the closing was again postponed. Although Budd will never become a smash hit, it is a cheerful indication that an offbeat but worthwhile play, which is bound to be produced and discussed by university drama groups for years to come, does have a fighting chance on Broadway.

Baptism of U.S. Grant

by Stefan Lorant

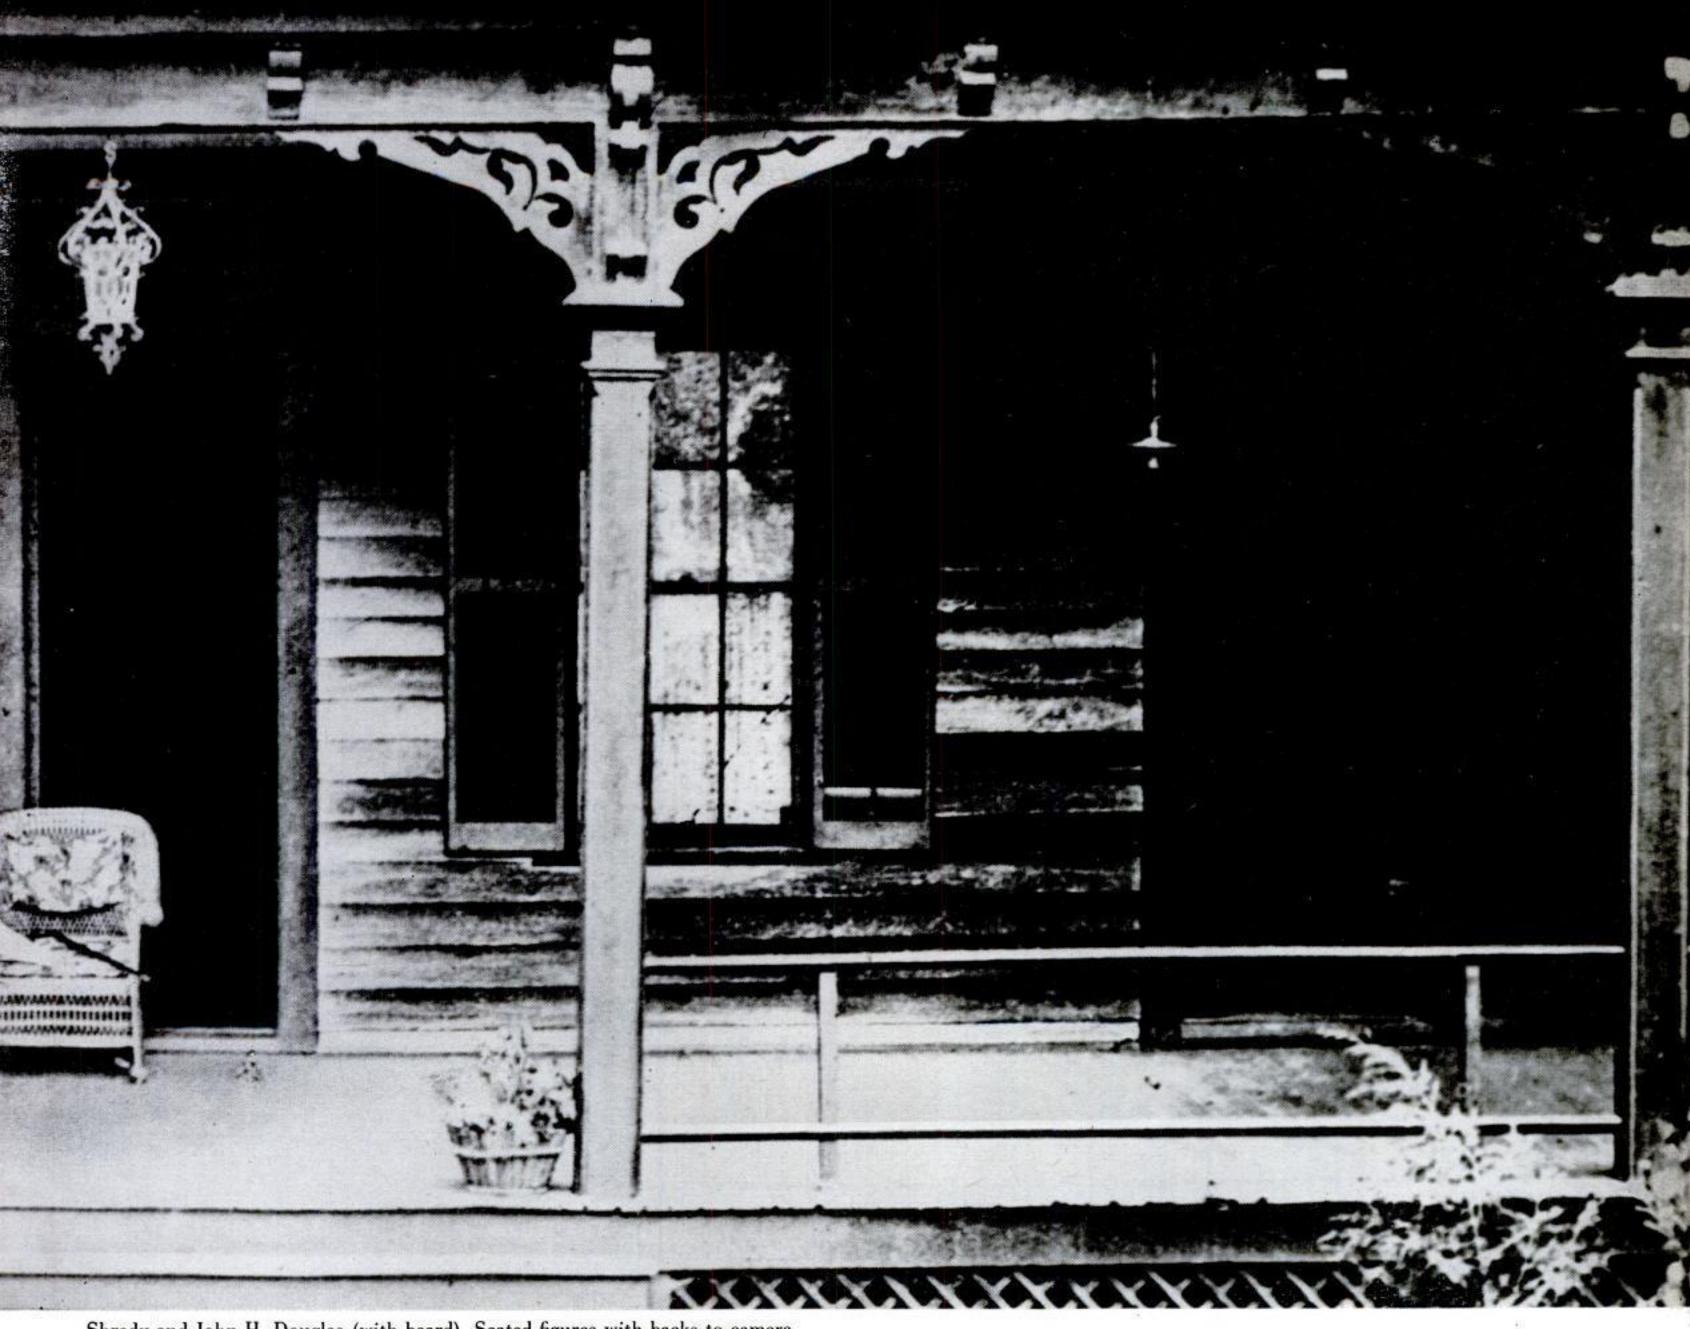

N the middle of February, 1885, American newspapers began a deathwatch for General Ulysses S. Grant. The doctors in attendance upon him were issuing regular bulletins to the press on the General's struggle with a cancer that had attacked his throat.

To one newspaper reader in San Francisco the news came like a call to duty. He was the Reverend Dr. John Philip Newman, Methodist Episcopal minister known to the Grant family as a friend and to thousands of fellow churchmen as a flamboyant orator. Dr. Newman had gone to the West Coast to deliver the eulogy at the funeral of Leland Stanford Jr., the son of the railroad magnate. He had become acquainted with the Grant family while the General served two terms in the White House and the minister was pastor of the Metropolitan Methodist Episcopal Church in Washington. The President, in the openhanded and friendly fashion of his administration, had even created a special job for the minister. He appointed Dr. Newman Inspector of U.S. Consulates, thus giving him, as unfriendly critics pointed out, a free trip around the world on the government. After both Grant and Newman moved to New York the minister baptized some of the General's grandchildren.

Now, reading that Grant was not expected to live more than a few weeks, Dr. Newman knew he had to terminate his stay in California. He wrote in his diary that he felt called to "be with General Grant in his last moments.... a great sufferer... is passing away.... I want him to go in peace." He was back in New York on March 13.

As a diarist Dr. Newman did more than record the day's events. His daily entries were voluminous and eloquent with his prayers, his random thoughts, his comments on what he saw about him. From the time he returned to New York to the General's death he was a constant visitor at the Grant home where, he noted with satisfaction, he was accepted as a member of the family. He faithfully wrote down in his diary how the General looked, what the General said, what he replied, and a progress report on his determined struggle to persuade the General to leave behind him "some immortal saying of his relations to Christ." Though Grant's mother had been a devout Methodist, he himself had never been baptized, and Grant's famous taciturnity put Dr. Newman's persuasive powers to a severe test and provided rich material for his diary. That diary, lost for decades and narrowly missing burial in an ashcan, was only recently discovered by the author of this article. It affords an intimate picture of General Grant's last days as well as a unique story of a minister's struggle for the soul of a dying man.

NEWLY DISCOVERED DIARY OF A MINISTER TELLS THE INTIMATE STORY OF THE SPIRITUAL BATTLE THE GENERAL WAGED IN HIS DYING DAYS

When Dr. Newman returned to New York to comfort his eminent friend, it seemed that the fortunes of the General, which had risen and fallen repeatedly and wildly for all his 62 years, had finally struck their lowest point. As a young man he had gone from penury on a Missouri farm aptly named Hardscrabble to glory in the Civil War. He became the first American to hold a full general's rank. With fame came fortune in the shape of presents: a house in his home town of Galena, Ill., a mansion in Philadelphia, a library worth $75,000 and money gifts totaling more than $100,000.

As President, however, Grant was totally miscast. Only Harding's administration has since even approached his in corruption and profiteering politics. The General, though personally honest, emerged from this sordid atmosphere with his greatness considerably tarnished but with his popular reputation still intact.

Then in 1884, after a totally disastrous adventure into Wall Street (see box, next page), came disgrace and literally complete impoverishment. And then the onslaught of cancer, making it harder and harder to work on the memoirs which offered some hope for his family's security.

The despondent old man was surrounded by a large entourage. There were his devoted wife Julia, who was passionately and persistently eager to stir the General to share her religious feelings; the three sons, Colonel Frederick D., Ulysses S. Jr. and Jesse; daughter Nellie, married to an English singer named Algernon Sartoris, who returned from England to be with her sick father; three grandchildren; a male nurse known as Henry; the General's Negro valet, Harrison, who used to accompany him on visits to the doctor's by streetcar to save money. There were also, at various times, six doctors who shared his medical care, the principal ones being Dr. J. H. Douglas, Dr. G. F. Shrady, Dr. H. B. Sands and Dr. Fordyce Barker. Newman called on Grant the day he returned. Of this visit he wrote, "The General is very much broken and the family think that his end draws nigh; but he appeared much better than I had anticipated."

A SWINDLER MULCTED GRANT,

FERDINAND WARD

American history offers no more horrendous spectacle of a man both great and gullible than Ulysses S. Grant. By 1880, after he had served his two terms in the presidency and had solemnly voyaged around the world in the style of a high dignitary, the General cast about for something to do. Nemesis led him to Ferdinand Ward, called the "Young Napoleon of Wall Street." Ward had formed a brokerage partnership with the General's second son, Ulysses S. Jr., and appeared to be making money. The General was invited to join the firm as a silent partner. He did, and not only put in all the money he had but urged members of his family to do the same. For a time everything went swimmingly. Then one Sunday morning in May 1884, Ward called on Grant and told him that the bank which held the firm's money needed money. Grant got a personal loan of $150,000 from William H. Vanderbilt, turned it over to Ward. Two days later the bubble broke. The bank closed its doors, its president turned out to have been in crooked alliance with Ward, and Ward turned out to be one of the more masterful swindlers of all time. Grant lost everything he owned. The Vanderbilt loan was gone, even his personal war trophies. He couldn't pay his household bills. What was perhaps worse, his personal honor, untouched

And he was pleasantly surprised to see that Grant "manifests dependence upon God in prayer more than I have ever known him to do." But that was not enough. Newman admonished himself: "I must get nearer to his soul and call forth a clear religious experience."

On March 22 Newman was optimistic: "This was my most satisfactory visit since my return. I had been much exercised in prayer to get at the General's spiritual conditions. . . . The General expressed his belief in answered prayer and so did Mrs. Grant. I then proposed that we should join in the all but universal prayer for his recovery. He responded affirmatively with an emphatic 'yes.' . . . As I concluded he said 'Amen!' with much fervor. This Amen from him spoke volumes to me. . . . Oh what a relief it was to my mind. . . . "

In the early morning of March 29 the General had a severe spell of choking. The doctors and the family were summoned. Grant was in great pain. He cried out, "Oh I can't stand it! I must die! I must go!" Dr. Douglas was able to relieve his agony and the General fell asleep.

Now Grant was haunted by the fear that he might choke in his sleep. Dr. Shrady, in his account of Grant's illness, relates that "he became so much demoralized . . . that he passed his days and nights thereafter in a sitting position, with his feet resting on a chair."

The day after the attack the General told Newman: "I shall soon be through with the things of this world, but it seems strange that I must agonize for some days longer." Newman replied, "It is the course of nature. The time will be brief to us!" "Yes," said the General, "brief to you who are without pain!"

Grant had become a shadow of himself. His weight had dropped from 200 pounds to 145. He would sit alone for hours, Dr. Shrady recalled, "propped up in his chair, with hands clasped, looking at the blank wall before him, silent, contemplating the future." Sometimes he played solitaire. Occasionally he tried to do something about the memoirs, only to give it up as a hopeless task.

On April 1 Newman was aroused at 5:15 in the morning by a note from Nellie Grant Sartoris, asking him to hasten to her father. When he arrived at the General's house everyone believed that the end had come.

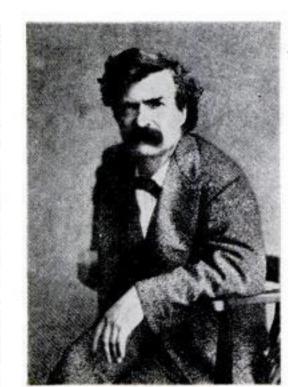

"Doctor, I am going," Grant said to Newman. "I hope the prospect of the future is clear and bright."

Newman tried to reassure him but Grant replied, "I regret each moment I have to remain and regret leaving my family." Then he turned to his wife. He handed her his watch: "This is all I have to give you. I did not have you wait upon me because it would distress you, but now the end draws nigh."

The crisis did not come until early the next morning. The scene is described by Newman: "All supposed the General was dying. Mrs. Grant and Mrs. Corbin, the General's sister, were in doubt whether by the scandals generated around the White House when he was President, was considered besmirched. In this dilemma Grant was glad to accept an offer he had earlier rejected: to write his memoirs for Century Magazine at $500 an article. Three articles he wrote were published and so well received that he was urged to write his story of the Civil War in full. The Century Company offered him the standard 10% royalty rates. The famous humorist, Mark Twain, stepped in with a better offer. His own firm, Charles L. Webster & Co., would pay Grant 70% of all net profits and foot all production costs, an arrangement that guaranteed the publisher nothing but losses unless an unheard-of number of copies were sold. Twain's confidence was justified. Before Grant had completed the second bulky volume of his memoirs, salesmen making a door-to-door canvass had sold more than 100,000 sets. Before he died the General, who had aroused the nation's sympathy by his doughty fight to finish his work despite pain and looming death, had the satisfaction of knowing that his family would not be left destitute. Mrs. Grant received more than $450,000 for the sale of the memoirs, a royalty figure higher than had ever been earned by any one work.

the General had been baptized and wished me to baptize him now. I said: "I will baptize him if he is conscious: I cannot baptize an unconscious man." I consulted the sons and they assented and the colonel said, 'It would do no harm.' As I began to pray, the General opened his eyes and looked steadily at me. As the physicians believed that he could not live five minutes longer, I prayed that God would receive his departing soul. I then approached him and he said: 'To whom do you refer?' I thought for the moment that his mind wandered; that he was not conscious that he was dying and the question was for information. I then observed: 'General, I am going to baptize you,' and he replied: 'I am much obliged to you, Dr. I intended to take that step myself.' I then baptized him in the 'Name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost.' He was conscious and wiped the water from his face. It was a solemn scene. Mrs. Grant knelt at his side and called for prayer and I offered the Lord's Prayer. . . . I should have offered the prayer of mighty faith; but that inspiration did not come to me. An inspiration from God did come to the physicians to give a hypodermic injection of brandy which in a few minutes revived his pulse, and then followed a day of improvement. All felt the joy of the change."

The General's recovery set off a public controversy. Dr. Newman told reporters that the General's life had been saved by prayer. The reporters also interviewed Dr. Shrady. He told them, "It was the brandy." Prayer vs. brandy was debated in the press at great length for days.

The disbelievers saddened Dr. Newman. He was particularly grieved by a statement made by ex-Senator Jerome Chaffee of Colorado whose daughter was the wife of Ulysses Grant Jr.: "There has been a good deal of nonsense in the papers about Dr. Newman's visits. General Grant does not believe that Dr. Newman's prayers will save him. He allows the doctor to pray simply because he does not want to hurt his feelings." After reading this Dr. Newman wrote in his diary, "Oh how grieved I was for God's cause. . . . But I wrestled with God in prayer to vindicate his own cause and not to let the General die until he had borne a glorious testimony for Christ."

By now Grant's plight had regained him some of the popular esteem he had lost, together with his personal possessions, in Wall Street. Mark Twain recorded in his notebook how the nation waited for news of Grant's death: "Many a person between the two oceans lay hours awake . . . listening for the booming of the fire bells that should speak to the nation in simultaneous voice and tell its calamity. The bell strokes are to be 30 seconds apart, and there will be 63, the General's age. They will be striking in every town in the United States at the same moment. . . ."

On April 15 Newman spent two hours with Grant. "I said to him: 'General, you will get well. God has answered prayer, and at any time you desire to pour out your soul in thanksgiving to him, I will give you and Mrs. Grant the communion of the Lord's Supper:

FAMILY GATHERING of the Grants includes (from left): daughter Nellie Grant Sartoris, youngest son Jesse R., granddaughter Julia, Grant, grandson Ulysses S. 3rd, Mrs. Grant, granddaughter Nellie, Jesse's wife Elizabeth, eldest son Colonel Frederick Grant and wife. for the Eucharist is a feast of thanksgiving.' He thanked me and said: 'Three times I have been in the Valley of the Shadows of Death,' evidently having in mind the Ps. 23:4. I said to him that I had never felt that he would die although the expressed opinions of the physicians had challenged my faith. I conversed with him on the chances of recovery and he thought they were good. He is stronger, and herein God has manifested His power. His spirits were buoyant and his faith in answered prayer was strong."

Dr. Newman brought the reporters up to date on his relations with the General, and they duly printed his account, much to Mark Twain's disgust. "Thrice have I been in the valley of the shadows of death, and thrice have I come out again," Twain wrote in his notebook. "Rev. Dr. Newman says Gen. Grant pressed his hand and said that yesterday, April 15. Ten cents to a thousand dollars he never used that form of words. This piece of misreporting comports with . . . Newman gush—rot—impossible."

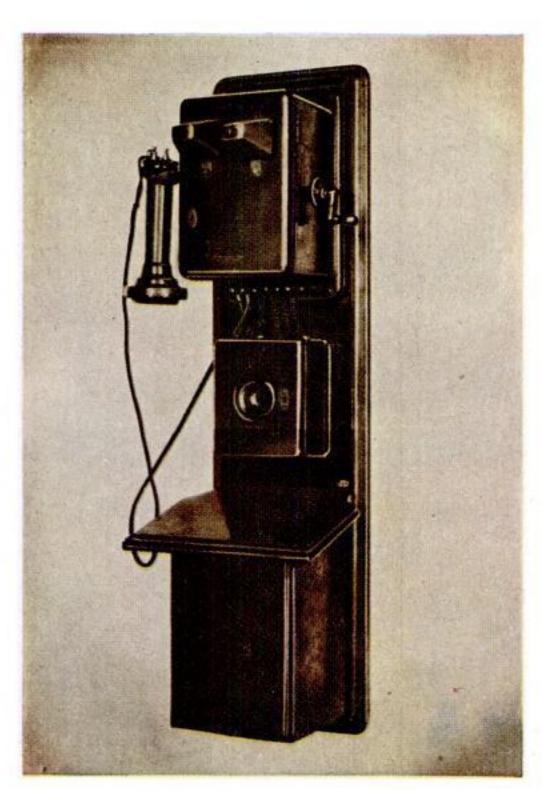

Three days later Newman noted another conversation with the General, whose condition now had greatly improved. "I believe you will be raised up,' said the minister to Grant, 'restored in health, to be a great spiritual person in the land. You are a man of Providence; God made you His instrument to save a great nation; and now He will use you for a great spiritual mission, in the sceptical age.'

"He replied in the most deliberate manner, with a clear mind and full voice: 'I do not wish to proclaim it, but it is my intention and resolve to throw my influence of my example in that way. I believe the Scriptures, and whoever lives by them will be benefited. I do not argue with man's interpretation of them, for the interpretation is human; but the Scriptures are man's best guide. I have endeavored so to live as not to injure anyone and when I have found that I have, I suffer more than they do.' . . . He inquired if I had faith to believe that he would be cured. . . . 'Can He cure a cancer?' asked the General. 'Why not?' was my reply. 'You must hold on to Him by prayer and faith.' I also remarked that I had received letters from those who had been thus healed from cancer. He remarked that he did not think that his was cancer. 'But whatever it is, He can cure you,' was my reply. . . . This proved the most satisfactory religious conversation I have ever had with General Grant; it is proof that I had not been mistaken in his religious faiths."

To Newman, Grant seemed on the way to recovery. "He and his family believe that his improvement is in answer to prayer," noted Newman with joy. A few days later the General told him that he had not gone for a drive on Sunday, though the doctors said he could, "because I felt that if a relapse should set in, the people who were praying for me would feel that I was not helping their faith by going out on the Lord's Day." Nevertheless Newman did not feel that his own position was solid: "Now that he is improving, the unbelievers say he has not had cancer..."

The General was now well enough to work again on the memoirs he had set himself as his last task in life. "It is my life," he said to a friend. "Every day, every hour is a week of agony. I am easier when employed." Nearly every day he would dictate to a stenographer.

NOTES AND DIARY which record the conversations of General Grant and the Reverend Dr. Newman are illustrated above. At top: one of Grant's notes, explaining that it has been a week since he could speak. Below: the minister recalls his reply to the ailing man. He reminded him that the great men of the Bible "ascended the mountains, not to die but to behold the glory of the Lord."

When his throat tired he would continue with pencil and paper in his race against time to complete the massive story of the Civil War. He composed his sentences with painful care. Dr. Shrady tells how, "after a long and studied effort in framing a descriptive sentence, he would read it to his friends with all the modesty of a schoolboy reciting a lesson."

Summer came with oppressive weather. Grant began to weaken. The doctors urged him to leave the city. A friend, James W. Drexel, offered his cottage at Mt. McGregor, near Saratoga in upstate New York. The General moved there in the middle of June.

The day after he arrived Grant wrote Dr. Douglas a letter (quoted in General Grant's Last Stand by Horace Green) revealing how low his spirits had again sunk: "Doctor, since coming to this beautiful climate and getting a complete rest for about 10 hours, I have watched my pains, and compared them with those of the past few weeks. I can feel plainly that my system is preparing for dissolution in three ways; one by hemorrhage; one by strangulation and the third by exhaustion. The first and second are liable to come at any moment to relieve me of my earthly sufferings. The time of the arrival of the third can be computed with almost mathematical certainty. With an increase of daily food, I have fallen off in weight and strength very rapidly for the last two weeks. There cannot be hope of going far beyond this period. All my physicians, or any number of them can do for me now, is to make my burden of pain as light as possible. I do not want any physician but yourself, but I tell you, so that if you are unwilling to have me go without consultation with other professional men, you can send for them. I dread them, however, knowing that it means another desperate effort to save me, and more suffering."

Dr. Newman, too, journeyed to Mt. McGregor. What he saw distressed him greatly. The General was sinking rapidly. His voice had become unintelligible, so that he had to write out messages on a small pad (above). To Newman's inquiry he answered, "It is just a week today since I have spoken. My suffering is continuous. The doctors, however—Sands and Douglas—say that my ailment is improving. I do not feel so " for a larger spatula to press down the General's tongue. Grant "took his pad after vainly attempting to speak, and with a faint smile he wrote: 'I said if you want anything larger in the way of a spatula—is that what you call it?—I saw a man behind the house here a few days ago filling a ditch with a hoe, and I think it can be borrowed.'

On that day Newman cried out in his diary, "If God intends to heal him, why not now?"

Then, unexpectedly, Newman reported that Grant began to feel better. He could speak, even if faintly. Newman asked Dr. Douglas about this and the doctor answered, "I do not know." But Newman did: "I knew that Christ had healed the General."

The improvement did not last. Soon again the General suffered unbearable pains, and again he stated to Dr. Douglas his willingness to die rather than to continue to suffer. And still he continued stubbornly to write his memoirs.

People came from all parts of the country and even from Mexico, pilgrims to see the dying hero or tourists to gape. Famous men came too, including Confederate generals: Forrest of Tennessee, Long-street of South Carolina, and Buckner of Kentucky, who had surrendered Fort Donelson to Grant and given him his first big victory.

He finished his book at last, a fat two volumes of 1,231 pages. On July 11, Grant handed Newman a slip of paper: "I have my book off my mind now. That relieves me of a tax upon my strength which I could not avoid." Newman took the General's pad and wrote on it, "I think it would be a great comfort to you if you would take the communion. I shall be here over Sunday and we will give it to you, if you desire it." Grant read the communication and scribbled underneath, "I would only be too happy to do so if I felt myself fully worthy. I have a feeling in regard to taking the sacriment [sic] that no worse sin can be committed than to take it unworthily. I would prefer therefore not to take it but to have the funeral service performed when I am gone."

Newman argued that the sense of unworthiness was the proper frame of mind and therefore he should take it. But as there was no immediate urgency he could take it now or even a month hence. Grant replied, "I am sure I am right for once. Another might feel differently. I have no desire to live. But I do not want you to let my family know this. It would not do to be known, because the papers would get it and then the family."

Newman "felt sad and disappointed," he wrote later. "I had prayed so much that he might thus express faith in his Saviour. I came to my room and laid his answer before the Lord in prayer; but found no relief other than in the fact that I had tried to do my duty. I must now leave the matter with the Lord. I have twice pressed the duty on the attention of the General, who is too feeble to endure an argument. What more shall I do? But he requested to have a Christian burial and he felt that in this request was his confession of Christ. But he may change his mind and request permission to do this holy duty."

On July 16 the General wrote to Dr. Douglas again; Newman copied fragments of the letter: "The disease is still there and must be fatal in the end. My life is precious, of course, to my family, and would be to me if I could recover entirely. There never was one more willing to go than I am. I know most people have first one thing and then another to fix up, and never get quite through. I first wanted so many days to work on my book so authorship would be clearly mine. It was graciously granted to me, after being apparently much lower than since, and with a capacity to do more work than I ever did in the same time. My work had been done so hastily that much was left out and I did all of it over from the crossing of the Rapidan River in June [sic, the month was May] '64 to Appomattox. Since then I have added as much as fifty pages to the book, I should think. There is nothing more I should do to it now, and therefore I am not likely to be more ready to go than at this moment."

"The dreaded evening hours"

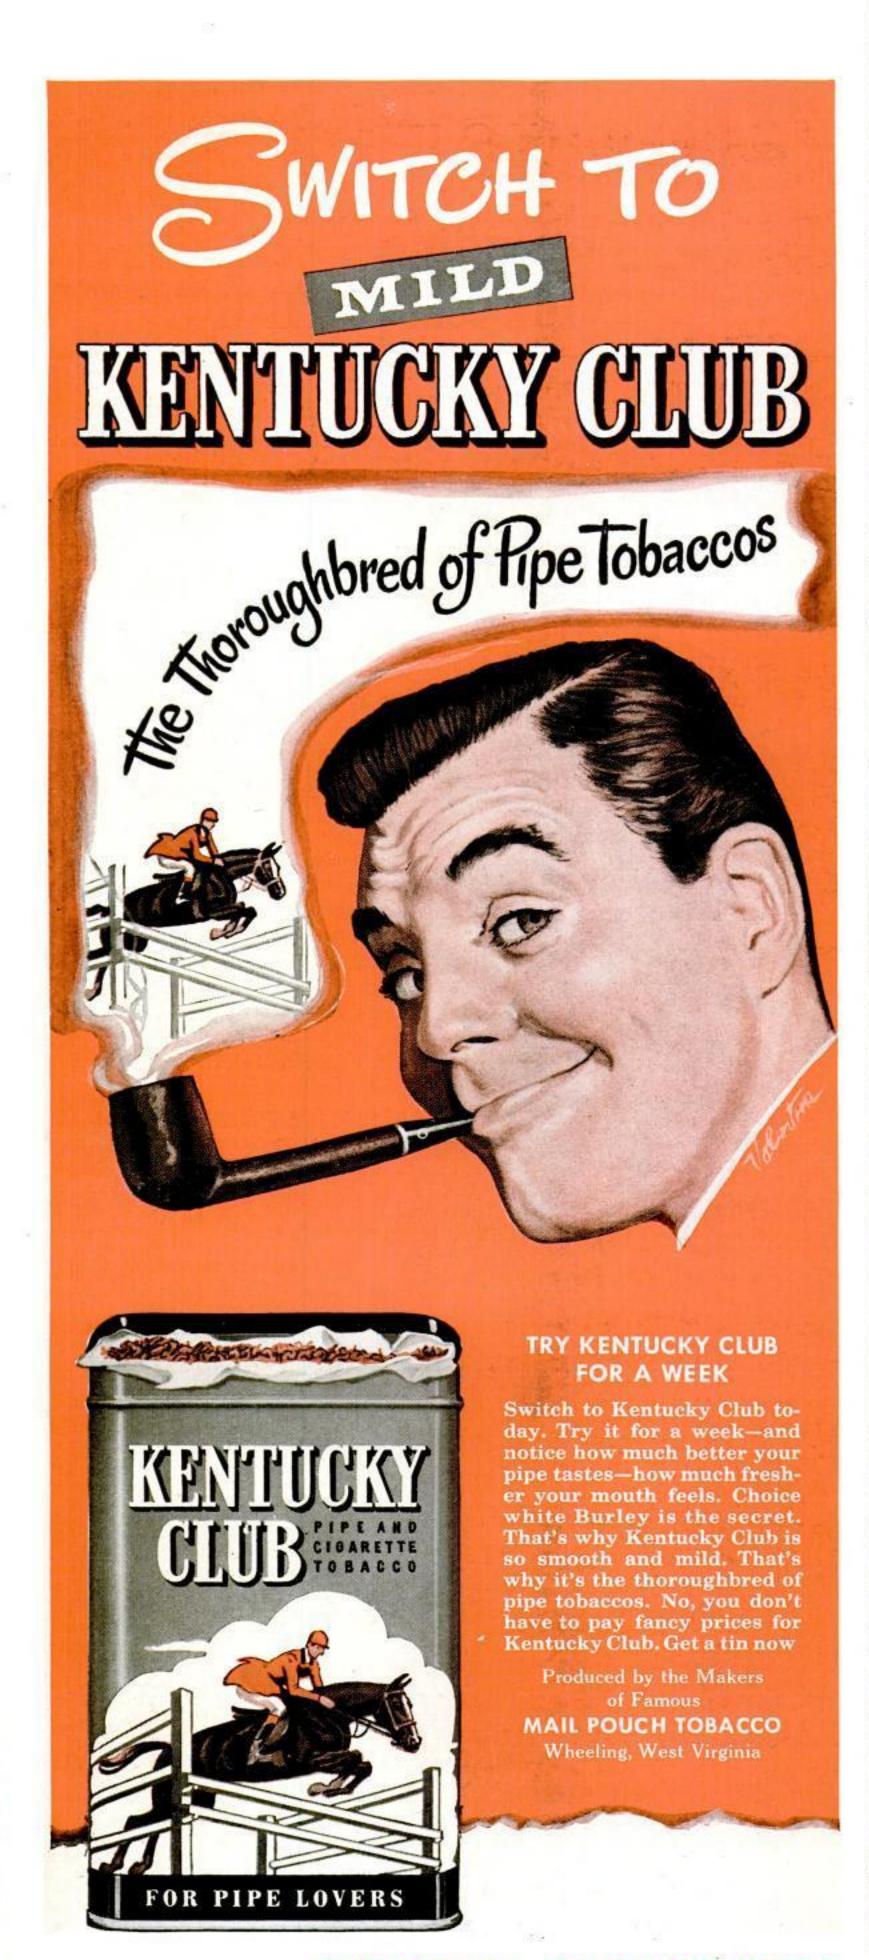

WEEK later Newman noted: "The General is rapidly failing. A But he was anxious for us and said, 'I hope no one here be distressed on my account.' The dreaded evening hours came, and while we were at dinner he was laid upon his bed from which he was never to rise. We hastened from dinner. All gathered around him and we all knelt while I offered prayer that God would receive his departing spirit. It was a solemn moment. . . .

'Toward morning the mucus accumulated in his throat and gradually filled his lungs . . . death would not be denied.

"At 8:08 he opened his eyes, took a last view of those around him, then closed his eyes and gave a short breath and he was gone. O what a moment! There lay the great warrior and statesman and dear husband and beloved father and trusted friend, silent in the sleep of death."

Grant had finished proofreading his memoirs only four days before.

On his body they found a note addressed to his wife: "Look after our dear children and direct them in the paths of rectitude. It would distress me far more to hear that one of them could depart from an honorable, upright and virtuous life than it would to know that they were prostrated on a bed of sickness from which they were never to arise alive. They have never given us any cause for alarm on this account, and I trust they never will. With these few injunctions and the knowledge I have of your love and affection and the dutiful affection of all our children, I bid you a final farewell, until we meet in another and, I trust, better world. You will find this on my person after my demise."

Mrs. Grant, sobbing, placed a lock of her hair in her husband's pocket, with a note: "Farewell, till we meet again in a better world."

The Reverend Dr. Newman returned to his hotel and began to compose a eulogy for the man who asked for a Christian funeral but would not take communion.

A few days later, to an assembly of distinguished people gathered in the little cottage at Mt. McGregor, the Reverend John Philip Newman delivered his oration. It took well over an hour. In the rather florid style much appreciated in that era, Dr. Newman apostrophized Grant the warrior, Grant the President, Grant the genius, Grant the family man, Grant the Christian. "The principles of Christianity were deeply engrafted upon his spirit. Firm, but never demonstrative, he was not a man of religious pretense. His life was his profession. He knew that Christianity had nothing to gain from him beyond the influence of a 'well-ordered life and a godly conversation,' but that he had everything to gain from the power and promises of our Lord. More than all things else, he was taciturn touching his religious faith and experience. . . . The keenest, closest, broadest of all observers, he was the most silent of men. He lived within himself."

TAPS were played after Grant's coffin was placed in temporary vault, later replaced by the famous tomb above the Hudson. When the call rang out, it was reported, "General Sherman's gray head drooped, and he wept as a child."

HAPPY'S LAST STAND

Baseball owners take away Chandler's $65,000 job

At 2:30 a.m. Happy Chandler put in a desperate call to his wife. "What shall I do, Momma?" he asked. "Shall I throw in the sponge?" He had waged the most frantic campaign of his life to be re-elected as baseball's $65,000-a-year commissioner, but even Happy, a professional optimist, saw the writing on the wall. Momma said not to give up yet, and next day at Miami Beach's Shoremede Hotel, Happy made a final desperate plea to baseball's 16 major-league club owners as they were about to vote. He embraced Clark Griffith, owner of the Washington Senators, and said, almost tearfully, "Fight for me, Griff. Make them elect me." Then he opened the meeting and left, wearing the broadest grin he could manage.

In his six years in office Chandler had made no major blunders. But his behavior and some of his decisions had alienated powerful club owners. The owners had made up their minds before their secret session, and the voting was cut and dried: nine for Chandler, seven against, three short of the number necessary to re-elect him. Happy's term still has 13 months to go. But when a reporter asked him, as he left the meeting, what he was going to do, Happy looked bewildered and mumbled, "I don't know."

BEATEN BUT STILL SMILING, Happy Chandler waves to the press as he leaves scene of downfall. Less happy in back seat is one of his aides, Dick Butler.

TIRES been so important!

EVERY MOTORIST REMEMBERS the years after Pearl Harbor, when natural rubber was scarce and good tires were a treasure. Many learned too late the importance of tire care in stretching tire mileage. Today, you can make your tires last longer...give you more driving safety... by taking these few simple steps:

1. Check tire pressures often

Your Seiberling dealer has a chart which shows the best pressures for long mileage on your car. Have your tires checked with his accurate gauges.

2. Have wheel alignment tested

Faulty wheel alignment causes rapid, uneven tread wear. Have the front end of your car tested by an expert at least once every year.

3. Have tires properly balanced

Seiberling's exclusive "Built-In" balancing is superior to ordinary methods, will last for years. Add thousands of miles to the life of your tires.

4. Rotate tires every 5000 miles

Your Seiberling Dealer will be glad to show you the accepted method of rotation..or will do the job for you quickly and economically.

5. Have tires inspected frequently

Seiberling tire experts are trained to detect tire trouble before it happens. Cuts repaired in time may prevent costly accidents later.

Remember . . .

High speeds cause dangerous heat and rapid tread wear. Moderate speeds mean extra miles—leave your tires stronger for retreading.

SQUEEZE AT ROLLINS

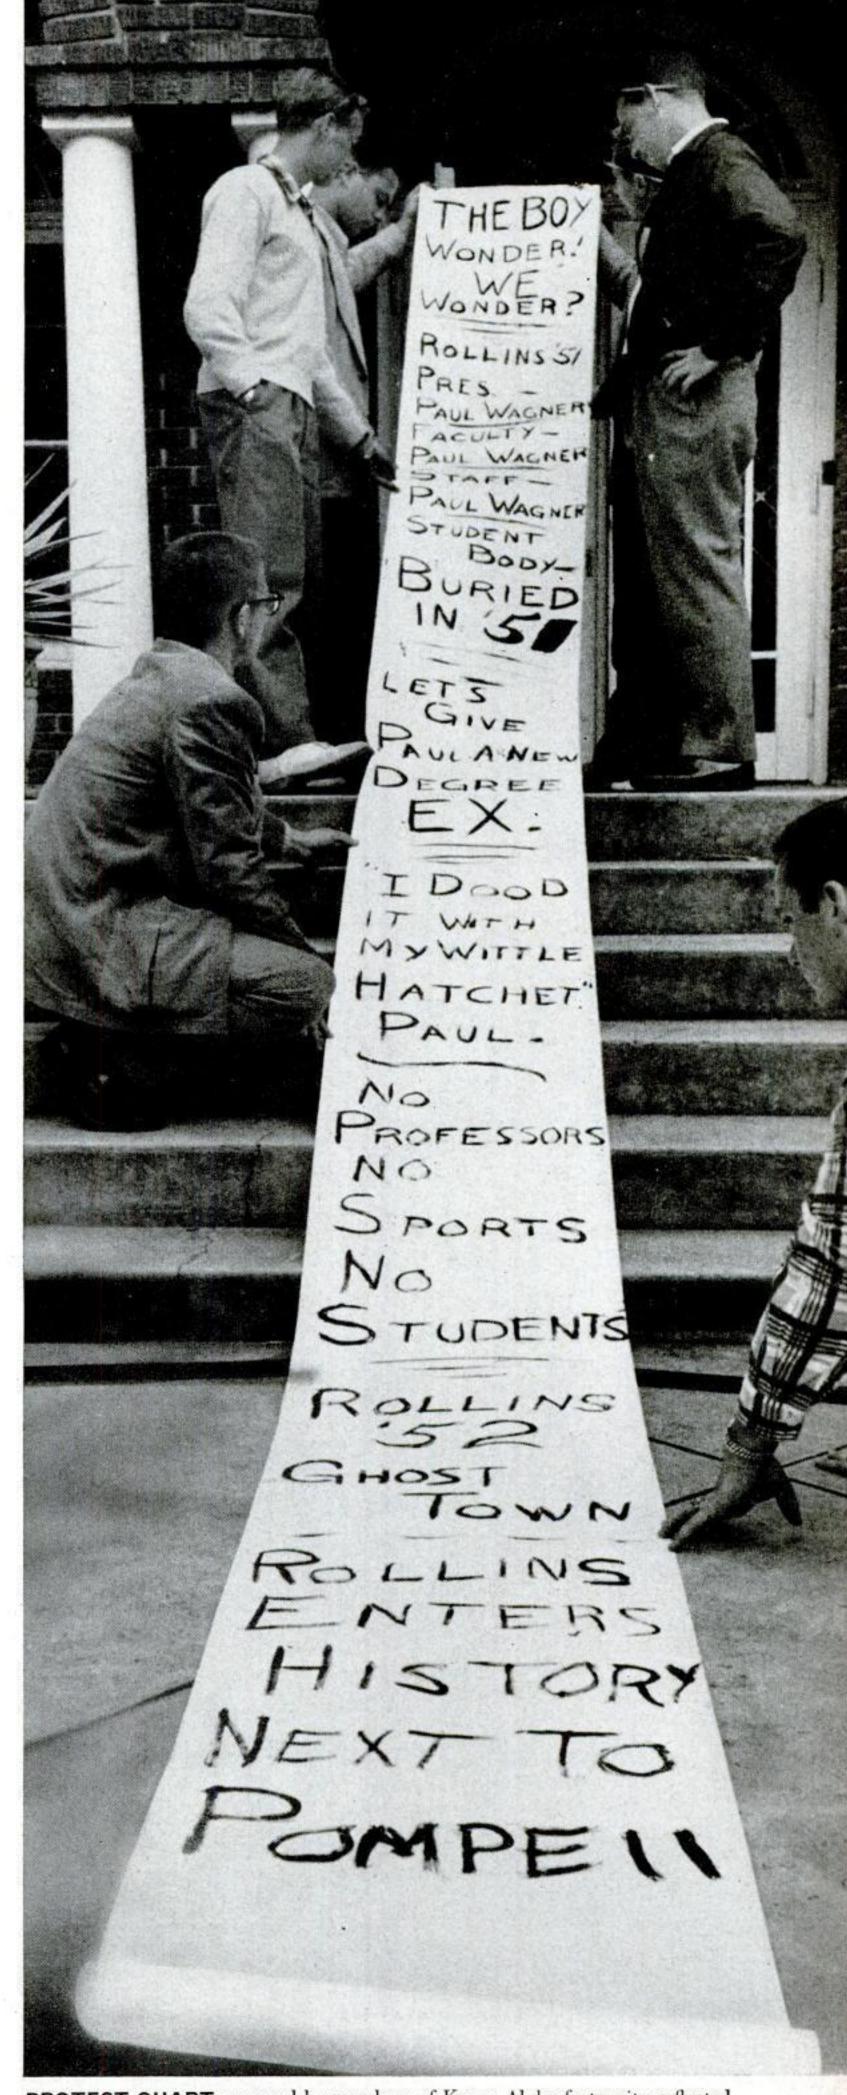

The draft and high costs threaten small college

Florida's Rollins College, though it has been trying to live down its reputation as a palm-shaded country club, never seemed much like a typical U.S. small college. But last week it was becoming a case history of what lies in store for countless small colleges. Rollins' 33-year-old President Paul A. Wagner announced that a third of the faculty (23 out of 76, some of them oldtimers) would be dismissed after this semester. Facing an enrollment drop next fall from 636 to 449 because of the draft, Wagner estimated that under his 1951 budget of $631,000 the college stood to lose $200,000 next year—and rising costs might jump the budget to $700,000. Unable to get an ROTC unit for too-small Rollins, Wagner had already decided that all intercollegiate athletics would have to be canceled. But he had to cut down somewhere else if he was to keep Rollins from becoming one of the 350 colleges which, education experts fear, may have to shut down in the next few years for financial reasons.

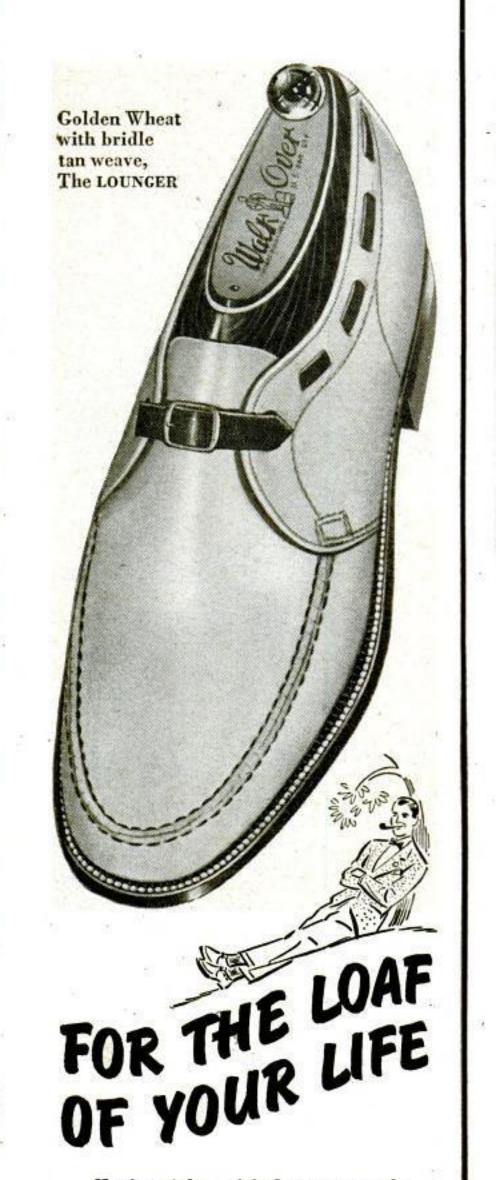

Despite his arguments, Wagner's decision started a furor. The faculty, indignant at not having been consulted, felt that tenure policies were being threatened. The students, angry that they had not been asked how to help save money, were making slurring references to Wagner and his "charts and mathematical formulas" (he even has charts on duties of a college president). Although Wagner had the support of the trustees, the Alumni Council Executive Committee voted formally to ask for his resignation. Spring vacation began at the end of the week and by the time it was over some tempers might have cooled. But Rollins' problem would still remain.

PROTEST MEETING of students fires questions at Wagner (at microphone), who here answers a student concerning the college's deficit of $10,000 last year.

PROTEST CHART prepared by members of Kappa Alpha fraternity reflected student tempers. But members finally decided against hanging the sign on house.

You're right—it's been a tough winter—especially on your feet, that have been hauling you around in gunboat brogues.

Time to turn em out to pasture in these colorful casuals.

WAGNER BROODS during meeting of faculty and alumni representatives called by trustees. He told them he hoped curriculum would not be curtailed.

"Two years ago, when Ezio Pinza walked his terrific warmth and magnetism across the stage of 'South Pacific,' man's youth leapt ahead ten years, at least!" wrote one reviewer.

Drastic effects such as this are likely to follow in Pinza's wake.

The Metropolitan's super-charged basso has been electrifying audiences for decades. Not only a musical phenomenon but a great natural actor, "he moves his hearers to tears or laughter with the merest flick of the larynx."

"A ROMAN EMPEROR IN TWEEDS," wrote a national magazine prophetically, of Ezio Pinza back in 1947.

Hollywood took notice of the resemblance, cast him in his first Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer movie as Mr. Imperium, an Italian king in a slouch hat. With his dignified, handsome person, and that elusive personal quality the Italians call "grandezzo"—the grand manner—his presence on the screen is authentically royal, even when he is singing a donkey out of its balk.

It's a young man's world!

Man is growing younger and healthier with

Just in Pinza's lifetime our life span has increased 25 years!

Yes, when Pinza was born, our life expectancy was around 43 years, according to Metropolitan Life Insurance Company statisticians.

Now, it's 68.2 years.

Don't think this good news applies only to babies. Whatever your age, every year your life is being extended days, weeks, months.

Good facts, these, as an antidote for some of today's many gloom merchants. Voltaire wrote, "He who has not the spirit of his age, has all the misery of it." And the spirit of our age is clearly that of man growing ever younger and healthier—at an almost unrealizable rate of speed.

"What a pity youth is wasted on the young," said G.B.S. But Pinza, Paul Lukas, Bob Montgomery and Hollywood's best-paid stars indicate it isn't anymore! And it's not just actors who don't know how to grow old. Compare your own clean-shaven, casual face with the stiff-necked old tintypes in your family album.

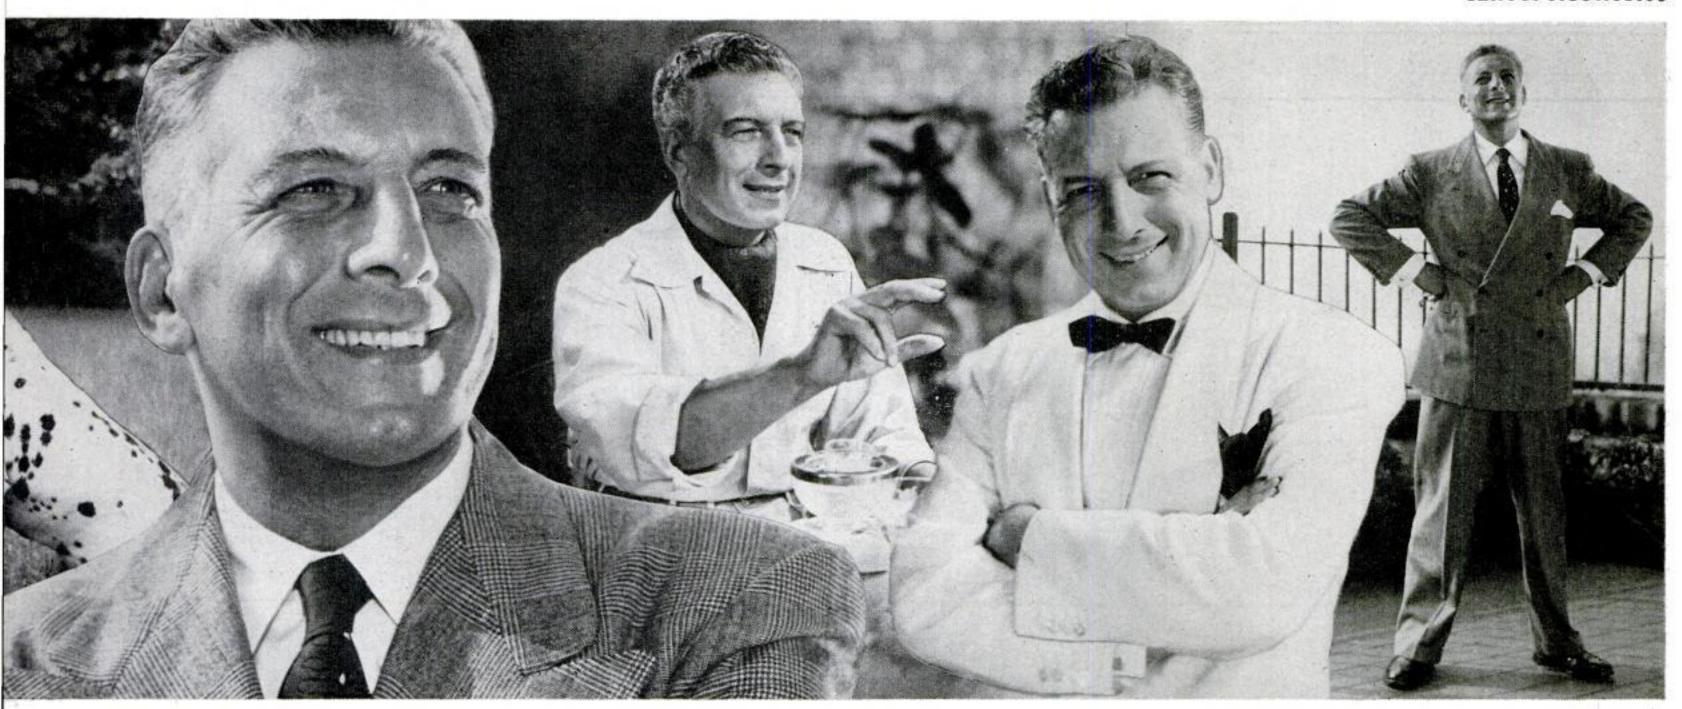

If "your face counts your years," as Juvenal wrote-those decades of youth you've gained just since your father's day, snow. And they show plenty!

Keeping young takes no special doing at all, today. Our whole way of life—our fairy-tale elixirs and pills, our eating, bathing, playing habits—tends to keep us youthfully active, flexible, stimulated.

And—a vital part of that spirit which goes with youth—men now take a young man's care of their appearance, all their lives.

Every year, more and more men give themselves those small attentions that keep a face young looking.

"Whatever a man's age, he can reduce it several years by putting a bright-colored flower

Yet there isn't a pretentious bone in Pinza's strapping sixfoot body. The adulation with which he has been continuously surrounded for almost 40 years—seems to have made no dent at all on his large, uncomplicated nature.

He hates to hurry, loves to cook, play bridge, ride his bicycle around the Hollywood hills, dissect watches.

He is a nightmare to press agents who have racked their brains for years trying to invent suitably colorful anecdotes about him. The simplicity of his existence resists the Hollywood sisterhood's best efforts. He still prefers being home with Doris, his wife; Larch, a mild-mannered Dalmatian; and his children, Pietro, Clelia, and Gloria.

fantastic speed

in his buttonhole," said Mark Twain.

And here's another habit that helps reduce your age by several years...yet takes you less than a minute. It's this: always, before you shave, give your face a good douse of the tap's hottest water. Your barber does it AFTER your shave.

But dermatologists say it does you twice the good to apply it before you shave. One, it brings up your own nourishing, renewing blood. Two, it softens hair for an extra-quick, clean shave.

"Circumstances alter faces," said Wells.

The everyday CIRCUMSTANCE of Williams Aqua Velva after your shave will do the most to give you a look of healthy skin freshness.

Regularly used, this circulation-rouser brightens and braces your skin in a way nothing else can. A very good reason why Williams Aqua Velva has become the world's most popular after-shave lotion.

Williams Aqua Velva is full of good sensations. Tonic freshness. A masculine scent. It keeps your skin flexible and comfortable . . . its natural moisture intact. And that helps protect it from sun, wind, cold. Another way Aqua Velva looks after your face: It lends first aid to scrapes or skin breaks, keeps your skin feeling soothed, looking young!

SUPERIOR IN VERY DEFINITE WAYS

...these preparations were worked out for all 3 ways of shaving

Special preparation for BRUSH users. Williams Shaving Cream offers your skin a new comfort—extract of lanolin—an emollient remarkably like that contained in all human skin. This extract is 25 times as active as in plain lanolin, the well-known skin conditioner. We're proud to say that it's found only in Williams.

Particularly, if you take a young man's care of your appearance—you'll really appreciate how this bland cream helps to keep your skin looking young and healthy.

For the BRUSHLESS shaver. Williams Glider contains the same type of oil that is used on a baby's skin. This special ingredient softens your beard and enables the razor to cut your whiskers close and clean without scraping. Another ingredient, found only in Williams, helps replace the skin's natural oil . . . soothes tender skin. Rubbed well into the skin, it helps to keep skin smooth, younglooking.

If you use a Schick, Remington, etc...a unique beard conditioner. Williams Lightning Lectric Shave is a pleasantly fragrant liquid that softens your beard so that it almost wipes off. One ingredient prevents sticky perspiration from slowing up your razor.

Another ingredient lubricates not only your skin, but the razor-head—giving you a faster, closer shave. After using Williams Lightning Lectric Shave, your skin feels happy; has a fit, healthy look you'll like.

After any or all shaving—use the world's most popular after-shave lotion. Never Miss Aqua Velva after you shave. Yes, any time you want a quick refresher... use Williams Aqua Velva.

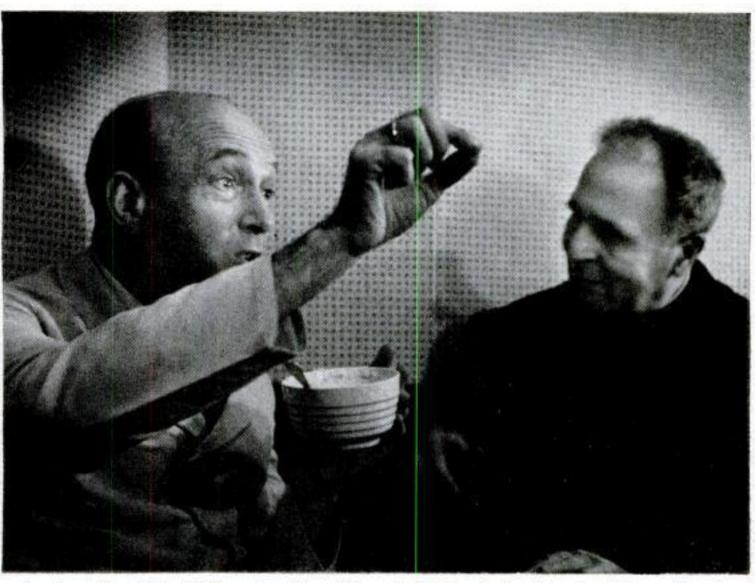

In the year 1840, The J. B. Williams Company put its first shaving preparations on the market. Since then our products have held the public approval. Their good name has grown and grown, for an obvious reason: Men know these Williams products do the work, and do it better. Year after year, more and more men are using Williams products. Year after year, more and more men are looking wonderfully young, alive and healthy.

Every year...men look younger and healthier!

LISTENING to the recording of Beethoven's violin concerto (opposite page), Walter and Szigeti pay close attention. For a while Szigeti clutches his violin (left) and enjoys himself. Suddenly (right), clutching a bowl of cereal, he thinks he detects an off-pitch note. But Walter finally argues him out of it.

RECORDING ARTISTS

Great musicians perform in a world the public never sees

PHOTOGRAPHED FOR LIFE BY W. EUGENE SMITH

The recording studio is a hushed and private world where the greatest of today's musicians often create their greatest music. There, far away from the brightly lit atmosphere of the concert hall and opera stage, the musician moves through a peculiarly intimate and shirt-sleeved world, not caring how he looks but caring intensely how he performs. He knows that a single record, which will be played and judged for years to come, must represent the quintessence of his art. Into a few minutes' work the artist may pour all his genius and pride.

Today the recording studio is also a very busy world. Enticed by the new, cheaper and more convenient long-playing disks, the American public is purchasing more than twice as many classical records as 10 years ago. More than 800 different recording companies, big and little, are catering to a music-minded nation. In these photographs, taken in RCA-Victor and Columbia Records studios, a score of the world's finest singers, conductors and instrumentalists are caught, acutely preoccupied, as they go through their recording sessions and, a few minutes later, as they listen with feelings of despair, approval or plain exhaustion to the playbacks of their own music.

PLAYING AND PLAYBACK: Gregor Piatigorsky, his face grim with the effort, makes a recording of a Brahms violoncello sonata (left), then unhappily listens to a movement being played back (center). At a later session

(right) he puffs his cigaret contentedly, satisfied as he can be with the play-back. "I hate making records," he confesses. "It puts too much stress on avoiding occasional wrong notes, and not enough on the over-all feeling."

DOROTHY KIRSTEN, glamour girl of the Met, records Puccini arias after first removing all her rings and bracelets, which might jingle and spoil recording.

COMIC, COMPOSER, A HIGH PRIESTESS

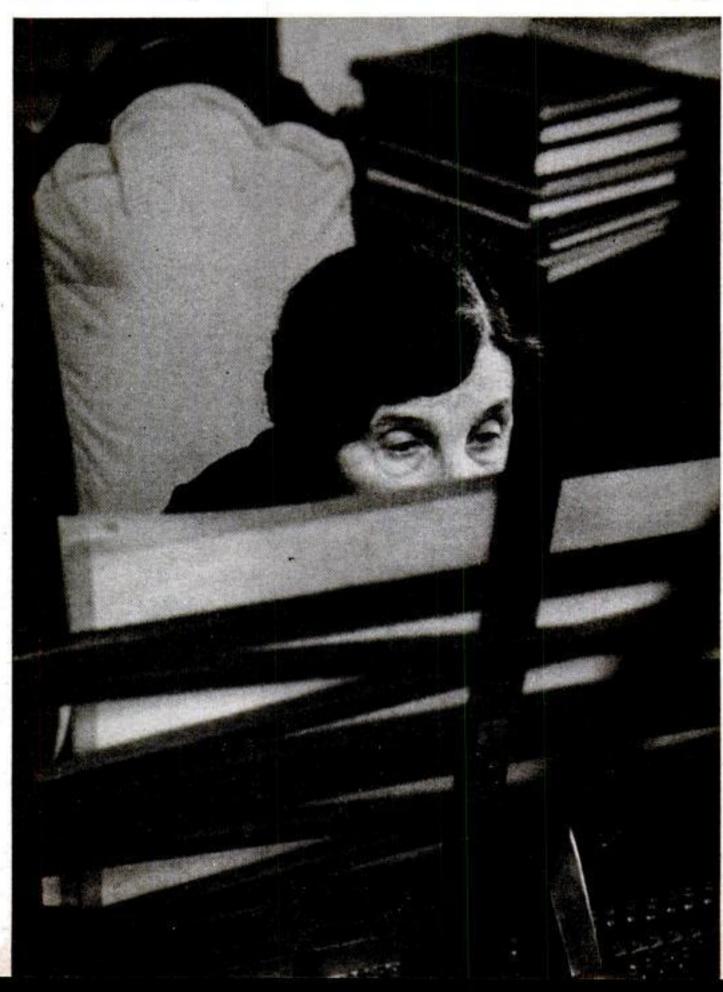

The technical innovations which today produce disks of magnificent fidelity have proved a mixed blessing to musicians. The recordings come so close to the sound of actual concerts that the demands performing artists make on themselves have become more and more exacting. Perfection being perceptibly nearer, the anguish of trying to achieve it grows noticeably greater. When they report for a session, the artists first rehearse and work out problems of sound and timing with the engineers. Then, in the face of a deadline, they begin the maddening process of trying to produce one disk not only note-perfect but also compelling in mood and emotion. Wanda Landowska (right), "high priestess of the harpsichord," has made as many as 24 recordings before finding one fit for release. At that, she comes nowhere near the all-time mark set by Conductor Arturo Toscanini. It took 10 years, two symphony orchestras and 26 attempts before he would approve his recording of Debussy's La Mer, a 23-minute work. "Every recording session," said one official, "is like a psychiatrist's session." To the artist there is no more tortured time of self-revelation than the moments when he must hear and judge his own work (pp. 126, 127).

COMEDIAN AND OPERA STAR, Jimmy Durante and Helen Traubel, join in A Real Piano Player. Jimmy was serious during his duet with a high-brow artist.

WANDA LANDOWSKA, 73, the only artist permitted to record in her own home, plays first book of Bach's Well-Tempered Clavier on harpsichord. Landowska lives in the Connecticut woods, makes her records late at night when countryside is at its most quiet and her own mood matches the music that she plays.

IGOR STRAVINSKY, rehearsing for recording, stands deep in bassoon section, roaring out correct rhythm of his Orpheus suite.

BESPECTACLED Risë Stevens and Robert Merrill care about voice, not looks, in love duet.

TIELESS Guido Cantelli conducts Hindemith's Mathis der Maler (Mathis the painter), named for Mathis Grünewald (pp. 74-85).

SHIRTSLEEVED Isaac Stern plays Tchai-kovsky concerto with Alexander Hilsberg.

PATRICE MUNSEL, tea thermos handy, curls up and beats time to herself in an aria from Fledermaus.

RUDOLF SERKIN, his hair bristling, listens with deep absorption to his Beethoven Emperor Concerto.

ROBERT MERRILL, after singing the same song three hours, frets as he hears instrumentalist's errors.

ORDEAL BY PLAYBACK

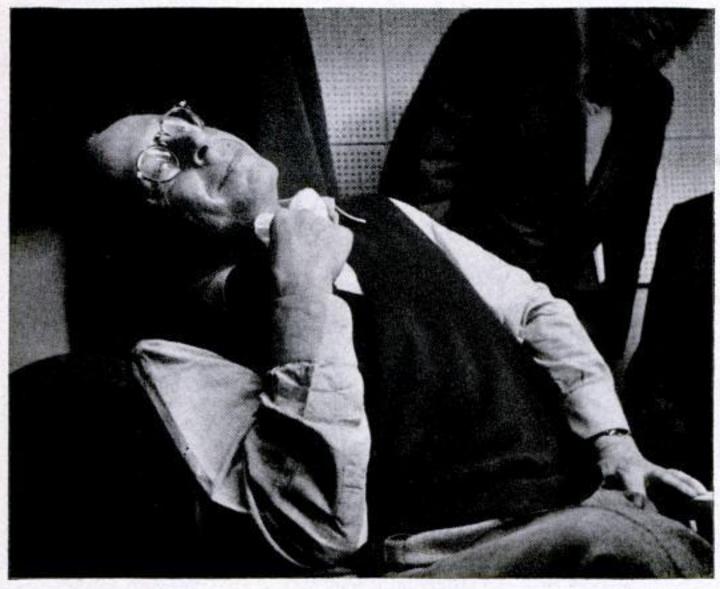

MARIAN ANDERSON listens doubtfully to her Brahms Alto Rhapsody. But orchestra applauded her.

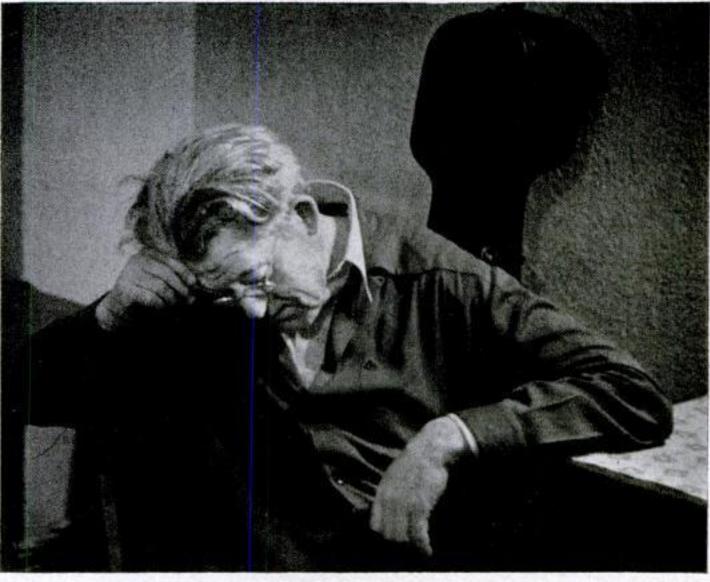

CLAUDIO ARRAU, a deep griever, would "rather give 100 piano recitals than make a single record."

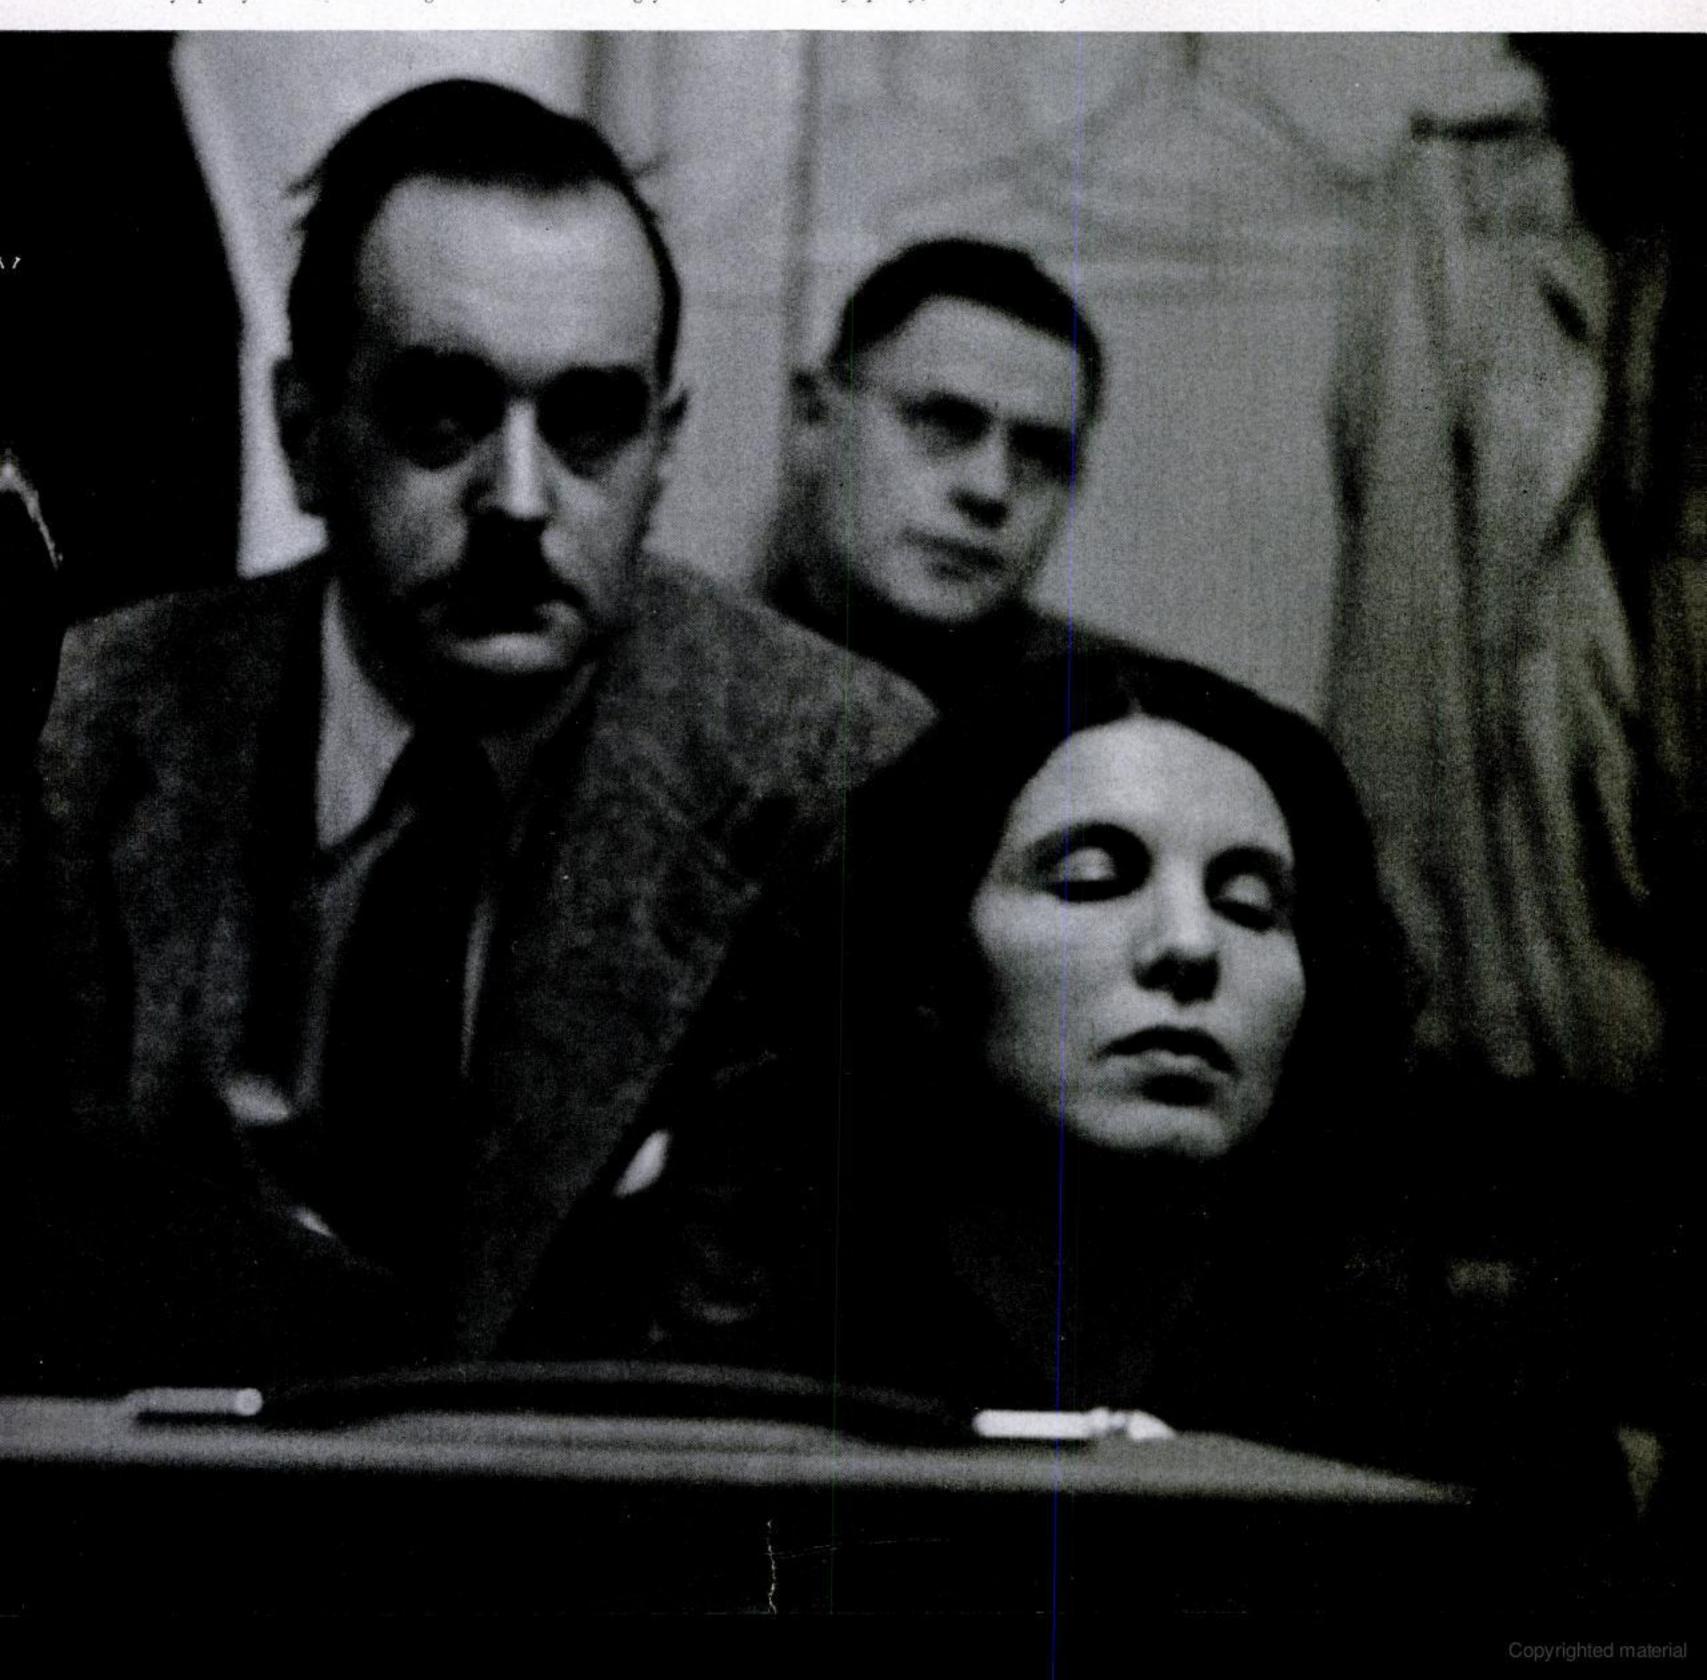

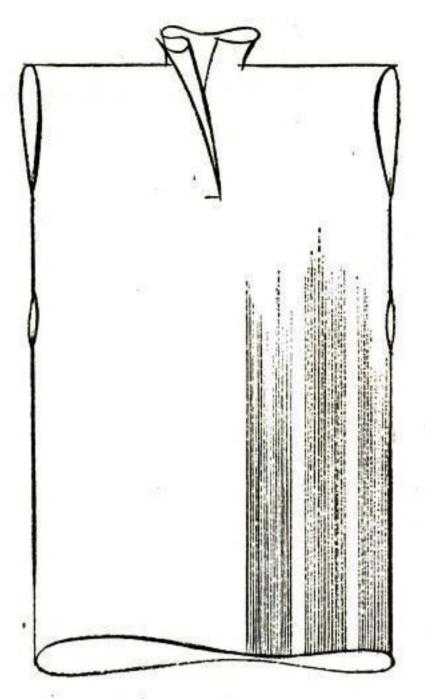

GEORGE SZELL, head swinging from side to side in time with music, enjoys his Cleveland Symphony Orchestra recording of Bedřich Smetana's gay The Moldau.

ARTUR RODZINSKI seems dejected as he hears playback of Franck's D-Minor Symphony, which he had just led. But when it ended he said, "Fine! I like it."

His criticisms of shoes produced the Bernardo Sandal which was successful enough to put him in the shoe business. BUTTONS are bugaboo of the designer (shown here with wife), but he could only get tailor to cut out holes on lapels, sleeve buttons of this suit. He claims a fully clothed man wears 70 buttons, mostly useless.

LAPELS, he feels should be abolished as archaic and unnecessary. The coat he wears here is an Italian domestic's jacket he bought for $2. He has no present plans for putting his menswear ideas into practice.

SLEEVES set into shoulders do not give smooth line, are often binding. Rudofsky recommends all-inone sleeve construction of this sweater. Stretchable knits are one form of present-day dress he approves.

WHERE THE WEST STOPS at the Iron Curtain, barbed wire fences, patrolled rivers or carefully guarded sentry boxes define the boundary. Beyond that line in many places is desolation, especially along Czech-Austrian border, where whole towns have been razed like this one portrayed for LIFE by Artist William Sharp.

ALONG THE IRON CURTAIN

A 1,000 MILE TOUR FROM BALTIC TO YUGOSLAVIA FINDS THE PEOPLE FEARFULLY WATCHING AND WAITING

by ERIC GIBBS, Chief, TIME-LIFE Frankfurt Bureau

ROM Travemunde on the Baltic Sea for over a thousand miles the Iron Curtain runs south toward the Mediterranean, twisting across plains, hills, mountains, severing a prone continent at the waist, cutting off family from family, nation from nation. There has been nothing like it since the Great Wall of China.

Just what is this Iron Curtain? To the eye it is many things. At Travemunde it is a rusty strand of barbed wire. At Benitz it is just a square wooden post by an open field. At Helmstedt it is a no man's land of concrete highway between two checkpoints; at Falkenstein, a picket fence behind a brewery; at Modlareuth, a village brook. And at Enns it is an iron figure of Christ hanging from a cross at the center of a steel bridge.

This is the Iron Curtain you see by driving, as I have done, along its winding length over narrow, snowbound roads (map, next page). As the whole world knows, there is another, more dread curtain not to be seen, yet known -just by thinking. This is the barrier of fear and hate that cuts the world's mind in two, that divides men who are free and men who are not free. But one thing you learn, following the Curtain across Europe as I have done, is that all who are beyond that barrier are not the same. Other divisions abound. For some who are not free are longing, even dying, to be free. Some are fleeing to find freedom where it still lives. Others have been so long without it that they have forgotten what freedom is. And on this side of the barrier, too, men vary and vacillate. Some are ready to fight to keep their freedom. Others have forgotten what it is, having lived so long and so luxuriously with it.

This is the first and in many ways the saddest lesson I have discovered during my journey.

THE journey began at the resort town of Travemunde. It is not quite the fashionable season here. The folding chairs are stacked in the casino bandstand, and snow is thick on the terrace overlooking the mouth of the Trave River with the steel-gray Baltic beyond. In summer on this same terrace they set up a telescope, and for 20 pfennigs people can look across the river at the Russian Zone. There is almost nothing to see of course, just wild dunes and a few bushes but no signs of life. But on a warm summer day it gives the casino customers a good 20 pfennigs' worth of shivers.

Travemunde people are proud of their new casino, incongruously big and white beside the rest of the town with its fishing boats and its quaint old brick houses of the Hanseatic days. But few of Travemunde's 14,000 inhabitants ever go into the casino. Half of them are expellees from ex-German provinces behind the Oder-Neisse line. When they want a drink and a bit of relaxation they are likely to go to Fritz Schmitt's cafe in a narrow street running off the long quay. The bar in the rear has plenty of drinks to warm a man when the high, tiled stove in the corner does not quite keep out the damp Baltic cold.

Here I watch two men come in for their aquavit and beer. One is plain-looking and quiet. The other is garrulous and handsome with silver hair swept straight back. As he talks he fingers a small porcelain insulator and electrician's screwdriver. He runs a radio shop these days. During the war he worked in the Luftwaffe's experimental station at Travemunde, now (thanks to postwar demilitarization) a jagged waste of broken concrete within a couple of hundred yards of the Soviet Zone frontier.

The cafe argument tonight turns on the Western Allies, now talking not of disarming but rearming Germany.

The sleek electrician says, "Would I fight if the Russians came? How could I? What with? If they came over this border tonight I would go home and do what I could for my family. . . . I feel like a snake slipping along between two big monsters who threaten to crush him. . . . The Russians can't be as bad as the propaganda has painted them." The stocky, red-faced man behind the bar filling up the glasses listens to all this and mutters, "Dreamer." The other customer, the quiet one, shakes his head disapprovingly.

When the electrician stops talking and dips his fine profile toward his glass, the bar owner takes over. "Neutrality is an illusion. Nobody wants the Soviet regime here. A struggle between America and Russia seems inevitable. It will be fought in Germany. How then can we be neutral? Playing some part in Western defense gives us at least a chance of winning back the Soviet Zone and uniting Germany again."

The quiet man nods approval; the electrician is unconvinced. So the argument goes on in Fritz Schmitt's cafe, as it goes on all over Germany.

To get a real close-up of East-West relations you pay 10 pfennigs and take the ferry across to a little tongue of land cut by the Iron Curtain. The local Charon is a cheery sailor in a peaked cap and double-breasted leather jacket. Says he, "You won't see any Russians over there. Maybe a cat or dog, that's all. The Russians are farther behind. They hide in the grass. . . . If they come over here I'll let them pass. . . . I'm old. I don't care much."

At the far end of the ferry ride you drive down a long, straight road. The bumps and puddles have not been repaired; this particular stretch is not much used these days. Passing former Luftwaffe huts, now housing German East Zone refugees, the road skirts the ruins of the air force experimental station, then a little farther on it ends abruptly in a road barrier: just a couple of lengths of iron piping, a few inches of barbed wire. Beyond is a small concrete blockhouse. Beside it are two sullen-looking youths in long blueblack greatcoats with rifles slung from their shoulders. These are the Volkspolizei, the "people's police." This is the Russian Zone.

Here the biting wind sweeps in from the Baltic and over the dunes, blowing clouds of magpies as if they were snowflakes. Your eyes pies as if they were snowflakes. Your eyes smart as you peer across this drab chunk of the Curtain that a cow could push over. You see the two Volkspolizei youths eying you stonily from their hut. Straining, you pick out other Volkspolizei farther back in the sand dunes. And beyond the range of even your field glasses are the armies of the Soviet—300,000 of them, holding down the Eastern Zone, ready to strike West on orders. Meanwhile they numb the brain and conscience of an electrician in Travemünde and thousands of his fearful countrymen.

Occasionally, I am told, you can hear a rifle shot ring across the Baltic beach. The Volkspolizei are firing at someone fleeing the proletarian paradise of the east. The barrier of wire and pipes is tougher than it looks.

THE long line severing Europe is marked by a few legally recognized crossing points. Northernmost is Herrnburg, near Lübeck. Here a wide concrete highway leads past solid new houses, built with ERP funds, and quickly comes to the zonal border, a no man's land a couple of hundred yards wide. Buses crossing the line disgorge their passengers, who must walk from one checkpoint to the other. Today it is snowing, and the northeast wind brings a bitter cold. Across the slushy stretch of land you can see the gates of the Soviet world: a pretentious wooden archway draped with Soviet and German flags, and in big letters the lying legend, Einheit-Frieden (Unity-Freedom).

Along the wet shining road come some passengers from a westbound bus. Two old women hobble along with heavy bundles strapped to their backs, rather like those pictures of witches in German fairy tales. A one-armed man, struggling with a heavy parcel and a 5-year-old girl, has just come from visiting his parents in Weimar. His line of talk is curious. "They live well, have chickens and a pig of their own. . . . If I don't find work soon, I may go to the Soviet Zone to live. There you feel they really take good care of the lower classes. . . . Political freedom? Here I have the right to grumble and criticize, true enough, but I can't fill my children's stomachs with my speeches."

Is he a Communist agent or just a dupe, another mind dulled by the horror of one war and the fear of another? You can't tell. You can tell that he is wrong. If nothing else, there are 1,336,000 men, women and children to belie his words, for this many from the Eastern Zone have passed through the big refugee depot at Uelzen alone. A great number were political refugees, but no less than 48% were driven by nothing but need. It is a one-way traffic across the line—East to West.

AT Lauenburg the Iron Curtain hits the Elbe and for 50 miles follows the wide, shallow river thick with the fat eels that stocky Saxon farmers love to eat. A couple of barges, drifting slowly downstream toward Hamburg, complete a scene of slumbrous serenity.

The air here has lost the salty bite of the Baltic. This lower Saxony is a heavy land. The occasional uplands are laden with dark evergreens. The flat fields are heavy with water. The people are heavy too. They look like their own big barns: brick, red and stoutly timbered. Their high cheekbones still tell of their remote Slavic origins—from the tribe of Wends who spilled out of Asia and settled down in these Central European marshes 1,500 years ago.

These people get a curt description from Lieut. Colonel A. B. Seddon, the British resident officer at Dannenberg. "The first thing to remember is that these are the most stupid people in the whole world. They were too stupid to get anything better than this marshy land. They are very stubborn people too. When they once get an idea into their heads you can't get it out with a hammer. Some of the old farmers still want to get back their Hanoverian kings. At the moment the people here have got the idea that the Russians are coming over, and they don't think they can do anything about it."

The blunt truth, of course, is that at this moment they are right. What could they do? And this fact impresses you ever more plainly as you talk to the people. It is fine for the Western capitals to groan with weighty speculation about grand strategy in 1952 or 1954, but what do you expect these people to do or to think if the Russians came tonight?

IGHT is falling on Schnackenburg, the interzonal barge checkpoint which once was a great fortress to defend the West against the Wends from the East. Out on the river, waiting to pass customs, are some barges towed up from Hamburg by the red and white funneled paddle steamer Brno. One barge contains rusty scrap iron for Soviet-controlled plants in Czechoslovakia. The others have soya beans.

The skipper of this string of barges personifies much of Middle Europe's history of the past half century. Born a subject of the Austro-Hungarian Habsburgs, he later found himself a Czech citizen, served in the Czech army. When Hitler grabbed the Sudetenland, he elected to become a German citizen, and for this the Czechs threw him out of the country after the war. He settled with his

U.S. Air Force Teamwork pays off!

"Tanks on road ... map coordinates Easy Baker 46-51." The voice of the forward controller calls by radio to F-84 fighter bomber pilots supporting ground forces, pin-pointing the spot where air attack has been urgently requested by the Infantry.

Screaming in from a long curve, the fighter bombers dive toward the target. Pilots touch firing switches... and the rockets slash groundward, each leaving its trail like a giant pencil mark under the fighter. The smoke column rises above the mauled target. Tactical pilots get on top... and stay on top... and ground forces move on. That is teamwork!

But this is teamwork of another kind, too. Those fighter-bombers and their top-trained pilots are themselves well supported...by the complex organization of Air Force ground crews...men selected from among the best ... trained to the peak of efficiency...all parts of a great United States Air Force, engaged in support.

That is why your U. S. Air Force wins.

Through teamwork, and because it selects the nation's finest young men and women, your Air Force gets on top...stays on top!

FIGHTER-BOMBERS... F-84 jets... strike with rockets and napalm bombs, knock out column of tanks moving up against our ground forces... at Infantry's request.

THEN BACK TO BASE... for refuelling, rearming... by skilled Air Force ground crews. More tactical missions are briefed... enemy fighters, bridges and supplies.

GASSED AND ARMED, checked for fast turn-around, the swift, tactical fighter-bombers are off again in minutes. Tactical Air gets on top...stays on top... and wins!

family in Magdeburg and works for the new Czech government, which is too busy with its own New Order to worry about those who served Hitler's. How does the skipper like his present life? The barges pay him a fairly good living, but he admits life under the Soviets has its drawbacks. "Even my best friend has changed under political training. After a few classes at a political night school he talked so differently I must distrust him as if he were a stranger."

After Schnackenburg the Curtain swings back westward. The country becomes flatter than ever, dotted with windmills and streaked here and there with lines of silvery birches. Around the village of Brome, wedged into the Soviet Zone, you see no Volkspolizei or border fences. But you soon learn that this is no gaping hole in the frontier. The Red police, just back of the border, keep tight control on all ways leading into the adjoining villages.

Here in Brome you hear some of the familiar tales of shattered families. The fat, red-cheeked girl in the turquoise sweater and rubber boots who helps to serve your lunch at the village inn recently sneaked across the border to visit her mother on the Soviet side. The Volkspolizei caught her and jailed her for three days for "political education," took away all her money and the new dress her mother had given her. The old lady who runs the hotel adds her own. "I have a cousin married in the next village behind the Iron Curtain. They have no church in that village so in the old days the people used to come here for services. Now on Sundays my cousin can hear the church bells ringing here but she can't come. She hasn't been here for a service since 1945."

AT Helmstedt the forests close in on the great autobahn like two black arms reaching across the white snow. Along the twin ribbons of the highway flows most of the legal traffic between Berlin and the West—the big trucks, the buses, all the traffic with proper documents in Russian and English. Through the dark forests on either side has come a great part of the "illegal traffic," humanity in flight: the political idealist who refused to choke down Soviet ideology, the tradesman or professional man seeking a decent livelihood, the girl who would not sleep with the commissar, the laborer fleeing the torture sentence of the uranium mine.

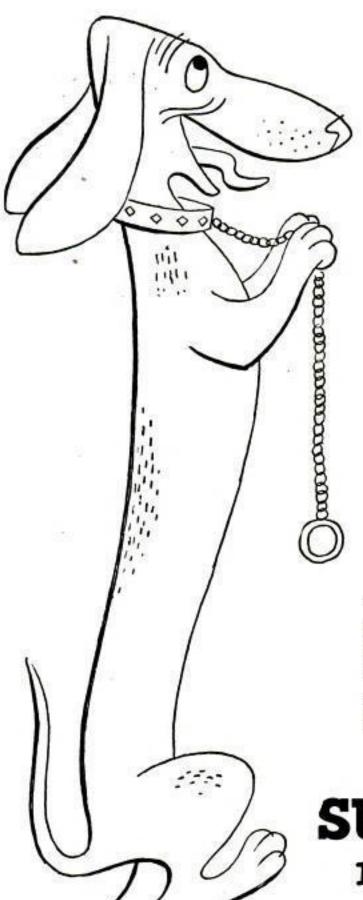

In all there have been more than 10 million, swelling into one of the greatest mass migrations in human history. At first the Soviets cunningly condoned the exodus. They hoped to plague the West with these additional millions of hungry mouths in an already impoverished Europe. About a year ago the policy was reversed: manpower was too precious in the East, and the tales of the refugees were too damaging to Soviet prestige. But trigger-happy Volkspolizei and Russian patrols notwithstanding, the flight toward free-

Receiving them, the West has paid a price: Communist agents have come across in heavy numbers. The Communists in Helmstedt have earned a Red Star for their work in receiving and passing on these agents. But significantly they have done miserably in converting the local people to Communism. In the past five years the percentage of Communists among the population has dropped from 10% to about 3%.

This, I learned, seems almost the rule along the whole line of the Curtain. Despite the corrosive work of fear, the mass of people everywhere have spurned Communism more fiercely as they have been nakedly exposed to it.

Grooming hair with Kreml makes the big difference. Prove it to yourself today! Read how it's done.

Here he foolishly plasters his thinning hair down with a greasy, sticky hair dressing which makes his hair look less than he really has. An unattractive shiny, greasy-looking film shows through on his scalp.

Here he wisely grooms his thinning hair with Kreml Hair Tonic to avoid that greasy, plastered-down look-to make hair look thicker.

Is your hair getting thin on top or receding at the temples? Then don't emphasize the fact by gluing your hair down with greasy products which give you that 'scalped' look—which leave such an unattractive shiny, greasy-looking film showing through on the scalp. Give thinning hair special grooming. Now's the time to start using Kreml Hair Tonic.

Kreml contains a special combination of rare ingredients that are found in no other hair tonic in the world. Kreml is especially prepared to groom hair in such a way that it looks thicker—like more than you have. Kreml keeps hair always looking healthy and handsome—so naturally well-groomed—never greasy, sticky or plastered down. That's why it's also preferred among men with full heads of hair who despise greasy goo on their hair.

Also a marvelous treatment to remove dead, dried-up scalp skin cells and dandruff flakes—to give your scalp a delightful 'wake-up' tingle. Your hair and scalp always feel so CLEAN. Change to Kreml!

IMPORTANT: Don't fail to try the new Kreml Shampoo with its natural oil base. It will never dry hair as so many cream and liquid shampoos which contain drying detergents do.

SOUTH of Helmstedt the earth opens into a vast black pit more than a mile wide. Straight through this opencut coal mine runs the Iron Curtain: 1,300 of the miners come from the East Zone, 5,700 from the West.

The police of either side do not actually go into the mine to patrol the border. But from their little huts at the pit's edge they watch the miners going down the long wooden stairs in the morning. And in the evening when the miners climb up from the pit, white-eyed and black-faced, they can see the armed police still there watching.

These miners have no illusions about Communism. On their committee of 30 members, including four from the East Zone, there is no longer a single Communist. Recently three of the most outspoken miners disappeared. But these Soviet tactics only sharpen the miners' hatred.

I talked with one of them who wore an incongruous black skiing cap with a threadbare uniform that once belonged to a GI. He told me the story of the Helmstedt miners' Christmas. The Communist authorities had tried to ban display of such un-Marxian symbols as Christmas trees. But on Christmas Eve grimy miners in the pit, lifting their eyes from their work, suddenly saw a tree defiantly stuck on a high point dominating the whole scene. Enraged Communist authorities summoned the men responsible, demanded why they hadn't at least planted the German flag beside the tree. Came the deadpan reply: "We couldn't find it. It must have been buried under the snow."

As we talk, another icy gust of wind blows in our faces as we look toward the Soviet Zone. The miner says through chattering teeth, "Nichts gutes kommt vom Osten (Nothing good comes from the East)."

ROM the flat north German plain the Iron Curtain rises suddenly into the Harz mountains, once noted for their canaries, gnomes and dancing witches. Now they are known chiefly for IBCs. This is the chilly official label for "illegal border crossers." The witch-haunted Brocken mountain (of Goethe's Faust) just on the Soviet side of the Curtain is now wrapped in swirls of snow. This is wild country, all hills and dark jagged evergreens looking pitch black against the white snowdrifts. But it is difficult to patrol and a determined man with a pack on his back has a chance of getting through.

Down from the Harz mountains the road leads to Göttingen, an ancient university town more recently famed for its physicists. Four of them have won Nobel Prizes. One of them, Professor Otto Hahn, carries on his nuclear research within a dozen miles of the Soviet Zone.

I put to Hahn the big question in Germany today: in case of war will the youth fight—and, if so, for whom? His answer held hope. "People are beginning to realize that the neutrality idea makes no sense," he said. "Europa is the big idea which now seizes the imagination. We must all join together and be prepared to defend Europe. If the young men of Germany were considered as equals in a European army, not just given a rifle with no tanks, I think they would be prepared to play their part."

Professor Hahn knows about the atom and its behavior under pressure, but I wondered if he knew as much about the reaction of German youth in the international cyclotron. I tried to find the answer. In the heart of old Göttingen is the students' restaurant, classically named Mensa. The waiter eyes me curiously as an obvious stranger but says nothing. The students drift in from lectures in ones and twos; now there are three of them at my table. It happens they are all law students but they do not know each other beyond a nodding classroom acquaintance.

In the corner is Hinze, the eldest, 29, wearing an old green Wehrmacht tunic. A lieutenant on the Eastern front, wounded six times, Hinze has seen enough of war. He is bitter about the Americans' postwar behavior. "I was captured by the Americans in Czechoslovakia but they turned me over to the Russians along with 200,000 other German soldiers. For us murder was only beginning." But despite this, and three years' work in Russian mines that followed, he will fight what for him is the worse evil. "I realize now that it is not enough simply to dislike the Communist idea. If I want to stop the Russians from coming here and setting up their system, I have to join the West."

But not all students at Göttingen see things so clearly. At the other corner of the table is Burschler, handsome in a pink-cheeked dreamy way. Twenty-four years old, he has seen much less war than Hinze, thinks less surely of where he stands. Flatly he says, "Siding with Russia is out of the question." He also says, "Neutrality is nonsense." But you feel that only his mind rejects this way out-his heart isn't in any bold proclamation of purpose. The ugly question "Would you fight?" makes him stammer. He originally came from East Prussia. Can Germany have it back?

What will the fight be for?

It is a question that echoes through the minds of German youth today. Only the carelessly glib can dismiss it as old-fashioned "nationalism." For it expresses an elemental need to be armed not just with weapons, as the Saxon farmers must be, but also with an idea, a sense of national purpose.

The third student, a 22-year-old youth named Vontzger, has formed his idea. It is the dream of "Europa" of which Professor Hahn spoke. He thinks of himself as European, superior to both America and Russia and distinct from both. He takes what for him is a realistic stand. "The presence of America is the lesser of two evils. We would like to build up Europe which has cultural values of its own. But we realize it can't be a 'third force.' It's too late for that and we are too weak. To survive we must side with America."

The journey southward continues.

N 915 A.D., Duke Conrad of Franconia built a fortress on a high crag just above Falkenstein to guard the border against hostile Slavs, and with her traditional lack of originality, history has again drawn the Slav border in this same mountainous spot. But for a few slowly pacing Soviet border guards, Falkenstein might seem the ideal place for a vacation. In the tree-lined gorge a brook whispers perpetually beside a comfortable Gesthaus and adjoining brewery. The front door faces west. A few feet from the back door is a waist-high picket fence—the Iron Curtain again—with a small gate swinging limply.

Kellogg's has been trying to find a way to tell you, without hoorah, how good Rice Krispies really are. Here, right before your eyes, we hope we have started your taste buds rising. But that's not all. When you add milk or cream to Rice Krispies, they give off with a cute little fanfare that tells you how crisp they are---"Snap! Crackle! "Rice Krispies" is a trademark (Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.) of Kellogg Company for its oven-popped rice.

Fifty miles south and east, Hof stands on a wind-swept plateau aptly nicknamed "The German Siberia." It is interesting for two reasons: it is the biggest road and rail crossing point in the U.S. Zone, and its 17 cotton spinning mills and its nine breweries mark it as one of the few big (pop. 65,000) industrial centers along the whole Iron Curtain.

Here should have been a natural arena for Communism. But as everywhere along the border Communist strength has dropped sharply. From 1949 to 1950 election results showed a decline from 6% to 3% in urban areas, from 4.8% to 2.4% in rural districts surrounding Hof.

From Hof a narrow road leads to the tiny village of Modlareuth. Here the tragic division of Europe can be seen in the simplest human terms. Eight houses are on the Western side, 15 on the East. The brook through the center of the village marks the frontier. The bridge across it is barred by heavy timbers and on the Soviet side by a deep trench to block any sneak crossings by trucks. By these rude barriers, families and friends are cut off from one another. The village post office is on the Soviet side. For a while the postman was allowed to come down to the bridge and hand over the letters to one of the Western Modlareuthians, but this is no longer allowed.

Modlareuth's one school is also on the Soviet side. Each morning the Soviet police let children from the West scramble under the barrier on the bridge to race up to the little Red school. One 12-year-old boy named Manfred told me how his mother took him out of the school after some harsh disciplining, how he now walks three miles to a school in the West. Now he has a brash and happy pride in being a "Westerner." Sometimes he heckles the Volkspolizei across the village brook. One of them the other day shouted back, "Just you wait until we come over and show you who we are!"

Manfred and his playmates are learning young and in their own ways what a world divided against itself means.

VOU can tell immediately when the Curtain leaves Germany and strikes Czechoslovakia. You see it almost instantly, and you feel it deeply. The air seems thick with tension.

What you see is bleak and foreboding. The houses on the Czech side are virtually all gutted, deserted. Here a roof is gone; there the windows are smashed; shutters flap foolishly in the wind; an empty doorway opens into darkness. For years now the Red-ridden Czechs have been systematically scorching their own earth to a depth of five miles from the West German border. Recently more and louder explosions have been heard from this dead zone. It is apparently being deepened. There was a time when many refugees could get through. This time is no more. Border patrols have been quadrupled, and the few who get through are mostly Czech soldiers, deserters from the patrols themselves.

Along the whole Czech border every fact and every rumor conspires to produce the overwhelming impression that something monstrous and menacing is being readied behind that long bleak line of Bohemian mountains. Here, in the jutting western reaches of Czechoslovakia, the Soviet world seems pointed like a dagger against the West.

In this atmosphere of fear you scan the frontier with anxiety. You look closely at that yellow house near the borderline. Unlike all the rest it is undamaged and a thin wisp of smoke curls from the chimney. See there—just to the left of the big tree by the house is a uniformed man with field glasses. That is one of the advanced posts for the border patrol. But now look farther back, up to the hills. On the skyline something is glinting in the sun. It is the glass window of a watchtower. Look closely along the whole line of mountains. There is another watchtower, and another, and another. Almost every high point has one. For 150 miles of Czechoslovakian border these eyes of the East seem to stare coldly back.

And what is the West doing? Big beefy Sgt. Robert Licht of Cleveland can give you his own answers. For three years he has been at the border control point of Schirnding where the railway crosses into Czechoslovakia. He tells you angrily,

"Coal and some little Skoda cars are mostly what comes out of Czechoslovakia. What goes in? Lathes big enough to turn a gun. Big presses and other machinery which can be used in arms production. I tell you it makes you sick to see all that stuff going in there."

The sergeant boasts that his post has the highest percentage of "returns to consigner" of any border point. But the official list of prohibited exports which he must follow still has many loopholes. He needs more than his big fist to stop that heavy machinery going through to the Czech plants, so ominously busy behind that dead border belt.

Never a Dull Moment with a ROLLS RAZOR

...unique among safety razors

...because you control your own shaving comfort with a Rolls! Just a few quick flips of the hollow-ground Sheffield steel blade on the built-in-strop and you have just the "edge" you want.

What's more, the razor is beautifully balanced to make it glide through your whiskers with precisely the right pressure. Just rest the razor against your face...never press, just guide it—it won't pull! Result: a smooth, easy, longer-lasting shave every time! No blade buying—no blade changing. The razor pays for itself over and over.

Austria and into the borderland fantastically different, yet almost equally strange for being so casual, so relaxed. In Linz, in the U.S. Zone of Austria, the waiter who brings the Wiener Schnitzel lives over the river in the Soviet Zone and commutes to work every morning. Like every other Austrian he has an identity card which enables him to move freely across zonal boundaries. The card has the usual bad passport photograph, the man's name and profession and a brief physical description in which his somewhat angular clean-cut face is simply described as "round." That is good enough because the Russians here do not seem to care so much. Commuting consists simply of walking across the wide bridge past the Soviet checkpoint marked by a big red star nightly lit by a single electric light bulb.

Even Linz's Catholic Bishop Coadjutor Dr. Franz Zauner crosses without difficulty to visit parishes in the Soviet Zone. About one quarter of the million people in his diocese are on the Soviet side in a 60x25-mile strip between the Danube and Czechoslovakia, and almost all the people in this area are Catholics. The 2% who are Communist in the Soviet Zone are in many cases employes of Soviet-run oil or tobacco plants, who hold party cards merely to keep their jobs. Often they do not even vote Communist. The bishop, a husky blue-eyed type of muscular Christian, chuckles as he tells me that in Rohrbach, for instance, with 5,000 population and 40 registered Communist party members, there were only six Communist votes in the last elections. Zistersdorf, center of the Russian-controlled oil industry, is an even more striking case: every employe must be a party member but here the Communist party in the last elections made its poorest showing in all Austria.

Painful as all this must be to them, the Russians are not in a position at the moment to do much about it. There is not, as in Germany, an East government and a West government. There is only one Austrian government, a non-Communist regime. That "chosen instrument" of Soviet policy, the stooge administration of local Communists, is not at hand. And Bishop Zauner says with considerable assurance, "The church in Austria is optimistic about the future. We work on the principle that the stronger we are the less likely the Russians are to come in."

The Curtain slices on through Austria as through Germany, but it seems a far laxer line here than anywhere to the north. South of Linz it swings eastward through the high snowcapped mountains of the British Zone. By the time it strikes Fürstenfeld, the most easterly point of the whole frontier, the British leave patrolling of the line entirely in the hands of the Austrian police.

The division of Europe that seemed so dread in the north seems almost desultory here. The countryside is blandly pacific, patches of green and snow. Churches in the pleasant little towns lift onion-shaped Byzantine towers as the gentlest of reminders of an earlier invasion from the East.

But that suffices to jar you from the illusion of peace in these snug valleys. To the east of Fürstenfeld the low line of hills screens the great plain of Hungary, once again a parade ground for Eastern hordes. To the south the high hills of Yugoslavia stolidly remind you of the perilous vigil of Tito.

And you think of all these peoples along the 1,000-mile road back to the Baltic sand dunes, each weighing his own gamble, all waiting, fretting, fearing. Above all, they wait—for something strong to fight with, something clear to fight for.

BARRED BRIDGE keeps two boys on their own (Western) side of the Iron Curtain near Lauenburg. Red cops and police dog keep watch on their side.

Life Visits the Cincinnati Literary Club

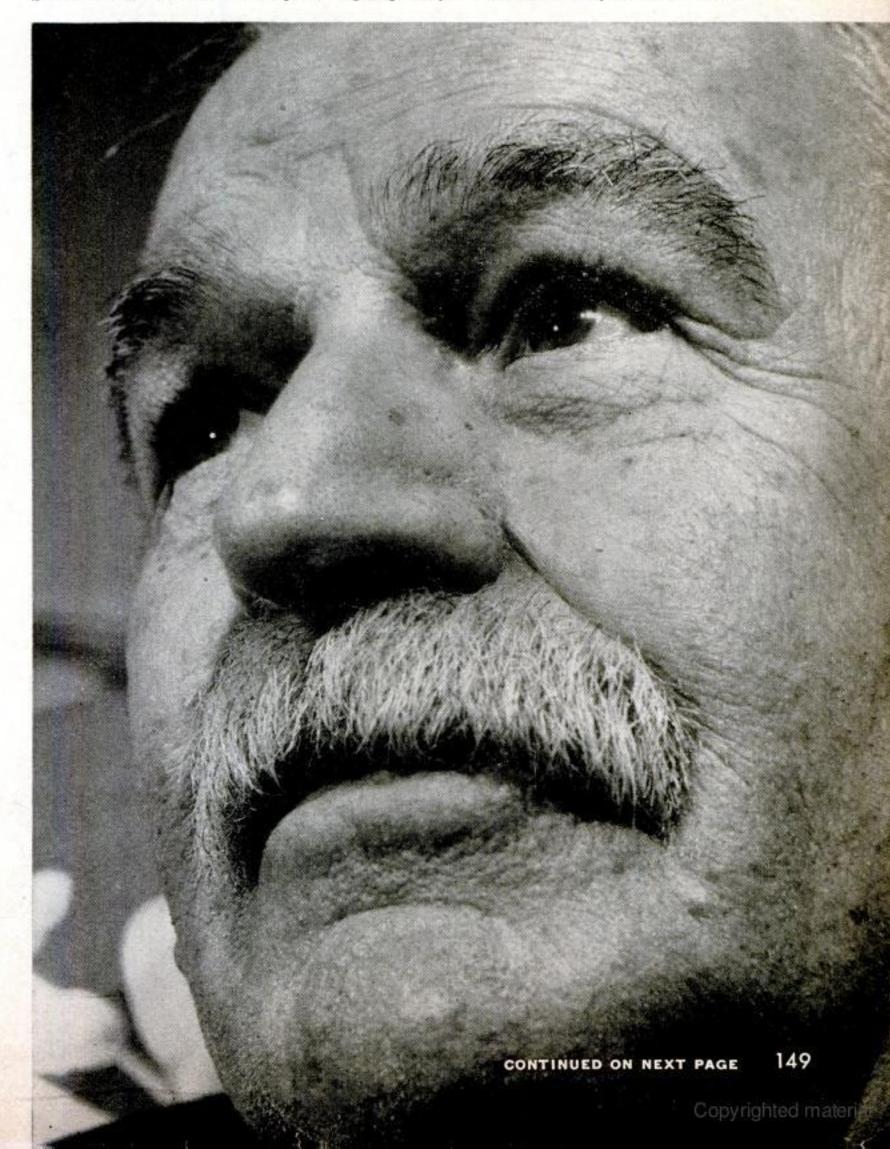

VENERABLE OHIO SOCIETY MEETS TO HEAR PAPERS OF ITS MEMBERS

For the past 102 years Cincinnatians with a fondness for writing and the discussion of writing have met on Monday evenings at the Literary Club of Cincinnati, the oldest club of its kind in the U.S. After a round or two of drinks they adjourn to the meeting room (above) and listen to a paper which has been prepared for that meeting by a fellow member. The papers take about an hour to deliver and cover a variety of subjects. A recent one entitled "What Happened?" discussed U.S. economic trends from Coolidge's time to the present; an earlier one was called "Canoeing with Dr. Fenneman." Each member must read at least one paper every two years. The papers are often discussed spiritedly, but, because of the near-violence which followed pre-Civil War papers on abolition, the members were long ago forbidden to comment on them outside the meetings.

The club's constitution authorizes only 100 members and a candidate must get the approval of seven-eighths of the membership. Doctors, lawyers, ministers, businessmen, newspapermen, even a few authors belong. Two presidents of the U.S., Rutherford B. Hayes and William Howard Taft, seven cabinet members and five U.S. senators have been members. Many of the members are elderly, but in the past few years several literary-minded young men have been admitted. The club inspires such undying loyalty that recently an old member, who was invalided at a Cincinnati hospital, had himself dressed in his tuxedo, stuck a carnation in his buttonhole and came to the annual banquet on a stretcher. Then, having paid his respects, he went back to the hospital and is still there.

DEBONAIR AS USUAL, FRED ASTAIRE TAPS HIS WAY ACROSS HIS HOTEL ROOM CEILING IN HOMAGE TO THE PORTRAIT OF HIS LOVE ON THE DESK (LEFT)

HOW IT IS DONE is shown in drawings. The scene was shot in a room which rotated. Camera (black), cameraman and furniture were anchored to floor. As the room turned, everything in it appeared stationary except Astaire who, while remaining upright, seemed to caper up the walls and across the ceiling.

ASTAIRE IN AIR

Here is the way he does his dance up walls and across the ceiling

Fred Astaire has used tricks before to vary his dance routines: in Holiday Inn he danced in time to exploding firecrackers and torpedoes; in The Barkleys of Broadway he was escorted by several dozen pairs of self-propelled shoes. But his newest film, M-G-M's Royal Wedding, has the trickiest number yet, one in which an ingenious camera setup (left) makes him seem to trample on the laws of gravity. He plays a veteran hoofer madly in love with a young dancer, winningly acted by Winston's daughter Sarah Churchill. He comes to his hotel room one night, he doesn't know whether he is going to win her, he only knows he is dizzily in love, and then up and around he goes, stamping on the walls, prancing on the ceiling, as illustrated on these pages. When he was a little younger, Fred used to announce his retirement after almost every picture. (LIFE ran his "last dance" in 1945.) Now 51 and apparently indestructible, he has not mentioned retirement for two or three years.

WHAT'S IN A PICTURE...

This picture of the Stokes family on their golden wedding eve might have been a page out of a family album. But it was a new kind of album. It didn't immortalize the formal starch of a family occasion. It captured the elusive intimacy of a home. Through the window of the camera you looked into Maud and Walter Stokes' living room, saw Maud laughingly holding up her wedding dress as Walter watches. Matrons become ample, but in the twinkle of Walter's eye you could almost see his young bride at the altar fifty years ago. And you could see, too, another parlor at the turn of the century with gay, young Maud, a bride-to-be, displaying her new wedding gown to family and friends.

You share through this picture the happiness of the Stokes family today. And you see in your imagination pictures of their earlier happiness. This happens with so many photographs in LIFE. The one you are looking at stirs your imagination and brings other remembered images to your mind.
